A huge Warmaster battle report between the evil Undead and the proud High Elves.
Fantasy wargaming on a grand scale! Warmaster brings the massive scope of enormous battles onto the tabletop. Generals can command an army of thousands instead of a skirmish force of dozens. Brigades of troops march resolutely across sweeping vistas, assaulting towns and castles. What more can I say, although the superbly detailed miniatures are only 10mm tall, Warmaster will be huge. Rick Priestly - the game's designer - explains the concepts behind Warmaster just a few pages further on, I'm sure you'll enjoy the read.

On the home front, I expect a lot of you will be keen to see the armies that are a result of the "Matt & Dave's Warhammer Challenge". If you've already flicked through the magazine you will have noticed that Matt's High Elves and my Skaven haven't been featured. Next month, faithful readers, we shall reveal all, along with the tales of our battles.

It has been an interesting few months of army building, painting, gaming, learning to read the army lists properly (I mean who ever heard of Clanrats with Magic banners?) and then putting my thoughts down on paper. I know that Matt has found the whole process just as intriguing.

Justin and I have also been to a few tournaments recently so we'll have a bit of a splash on them next issue. Look out for our CANCON 2000 photos. Over 120 gamers enjoying themselves over a sunny January weekend.

Anyway, enough of this banter. On with the show!

AND SO IT BEGINS!

With the countdown to Games Day in October 2000 well underway, we here at the White Dwarf thought it'd be really cool to give everybody out there a bit of a sneak-peak at some of the concept sketches of what will hopefully be our feature Warhammer display table.

Our resident insomniac, Matt Weaver scribbled these pictures way back in January, since then he has squirrelled these designs safely away, until we lured him away from his desk with a pot of fresh coffee and promptly made off with the drawings!

This table promises to be our most ambitious and detailed one yet, so keep watching these pages over following months as "DA FORT" grows.
Our latest game is now here! Warmaster is a new scale of fantasy wargaming, using 10mm figures to represent vast armies marching across panoramic battlefields to engage the enemy.

Out this month along with the rulebook are the High Elf and Undead armies. The following months will see the release of the Empire, Dwarf, Chaos and Orc & Goblin armies that are also detailed in the rules. Games Designer Rick Priestley explains what it’s all about later in the issue, and there is also a titanic battle report to give you an idea of how the game plays.

Models from the Warmaster High Elf army.

SENTINELS STRIDE IN!

Games Workshop’s latest plastic kit is the awesome Imperial Guard Sentinel, released this month as a three-model boxed set.

Squadrons of Sentinels are used to scout ahead of the main force. They also carry formidable anti-personnel weapons – usually multi-lasers or heavy flamers.

The new design was based on concept drawings by Jes Goodwin and worked up by Tim Adcock (ably assisted by Michael Perry and Alan Perry). This issue, we take a look at the different roles of Sentinels in battle and some of the colour schemes used by the Imperial Guard in their many campaigns. Next month we’ll take a look at some of the modelling possibilities the kit allows.

GREENSKINS INVADE MORDHEIM

The City of the Damned is a place of violence and battle, with the promise of riches and glory for the victorious – it was only a matter of time before the Orcs arrived on the scene.

This month’s Town Cryer includes full rules for using Orc & Goblin warbands in your Mordheim games, complete with Big ‘Uns, Shamans, Goblins, Squigs and Trolls. There are rules for Animosity, special skills including ‘Eadbasher and Da Cunnin’ Plan, and Waaagh! magic with spells like Fire of Gork, Clubba and Oil Gerroff!
TOWN CRYER TAKEOVER

Mordheim, City of the Damned, has been one of our most popular games to date, outstripping all our expectations. We’ve received a huge volume of letters, ideas and suggestions for new rules, warbands and scenarios from enthusiastic gamers. So many in fact that we simply can’t fit everything that we’d like to print into White Dwarf.

So after six months as part of White Dwarf, Town Cryer is breaking away to become a publication in its own right, under the auspices of Fanatic Press and the Black Library. Very soon Mordheim fans will have a whole magazine dedicated entirely to them, full of mayhem and madness from the ruined streets of the city. This also means that you’ll have an even better chance of getting your ideas published – so get writing!

KIDNAPPING!

Paul Sawyer’s Possessed warband attempts to sacrifice the kidnapped burgemeister’s daughter, in the new scenario from this month’s Town Cryer.

THERE CAN BE ONLY ONE!

Last month we showed you the rules for running a multiplayer Mordheim game. Stay tuned for next issue to see GW OZ staffers give those rules a whirl...

Our choices were limited, we could either set off the fire alarms in the office, or invite Booster (OZ White Dwarf) and Jim Fox (International Man of Mystery, and Head of Retail) out of their confined damp spaces to get some air and play a few games of Mordheim.

So bear witness to the carnage wrought as Booster’s Orc warband, and Jim’s Skaven (henceforth known as the Nightcrawlers) pit themselves against all of the guile and cunning of Grant Peacey (Sydney store Manager) and his Marienburger warband in a dangerous triple threat match!
As well as being the master of sticky tape art, our very own Justin "Booster" Keyes is still endeavouring to bring you, the reader, closer to your happy place.
And what is that happy place I hear you ask, why it's that warm snug realm where you have possession of choice morsels of information concerning what new and fantastic product is soon to be released (some of which is wrapped in shiny plastic film!).

This month though, Booster has decided to be somewhat cryptic in his description of what new products are just around the corner...
"...it's big, fits loads of Space Marines, has lots of big guns, and begins with L"
"...my other favourite fictional character who's name is Logan..."
"...even smaller Dwarfs!!!!"
"...Catachan Jungle fighters with stuff that goes BOOM! - in a blister pack!"

Watch this space over the next few months for more juicy tid-bits from Booster!

Beware, for the wolves are on the hunt. The Space Wolves are far from being a Codex chapter. They are wild and ferocious and have their own unique force organisation.

The new Codex (released next month) provides full rules for these barbaric Space Marines, complete with Blood Claws, Long Fangs, Fenris Wolves and all the other elements that form a Space Wolves army. There will also be some rather stunning miniatures to support the release of the Codex, including, in the not too distant future, a new transport vehicle. We know you'll be impressed.

THERE'S A WARP STORM BREWING!
In the spirit of millennial collaboration, the Black Library and White Dwarf are proud to announce the eagerly awaited Battlefleet Gothic compilation, Warp Storm, which bursts onto the shelves this month. This hefty tome is packed with all the essential White Dwarf articles, covering a whole range of advice, tips, tactics and battle reports, together with a host of new and unseen stuff too. Some of the highlights in what promises to be an epic release include: new scenarios, the devastating Chaos Planet Killer, tactics on how to achieve the best from your torpedo salvos, and much, much, MUCH more.

COMIC MAYHEM!
The carnage and mayhem continues in Warhammer Monthly #27 with a whole heap of new stories and some of your firm favourites too. Bloodquest sees Leonatos and the Blood Angels battling their way across the Daemon world of Eidolon; this episode they must enter the plague city of Nurgle! Meanwhile, Mike Perkins and Mitchel Scanton bring us more tales of the mysterious Hellbrandt Grimm. We have the debut of a brand new character from Dan Abnett; Crusader follows the adventures of a Bretonnian knight as he seeks to slake his blood lust and desire for battle. And finally, we also have a superbly out-there new Kev Walker story. Pariah: The Daemon Heart. This stunning saga tells of a lone Eldar warrior who quests in the depths of space - but in search of what, and who is the mysterious Sister of Battle who haunts his visions? All this plus features, reader offers and (here we go again!) much, much more...

IT'S A MOOT POINT!
This month the incumbents of the Journal Bunker have decided, against the better judgement of their peers, to focus on that most maligned of all the fantasy races, the Halfling. These innocent little bun-munchers have come in for a right load of stick over the years, and now it's time to put the record straight! Also packed into issue 36 of the Games Workshop hobby's own fanzine are the usual horde of scenarios, rules, Doc Butcha's awesome conversions, Imperial Armour and a whole load more.
Warmaster is the name of my brand new tabletop wargame. It is a new game in almost every respect – the models are on an entirely new scale, the game's system is something completely different to anything I've done previously, and unique tactical skills are required to win too. Sounds kind of perverse, eh! So what's the big idea?

At the heart of it, the big idea is great BIG battles. Conventional Warhammer and Warhammer 40,000 games use models about 30mm high. The size of the models places a natural restriction on the type of encounter that can be fought on a tabletop. This is especially true of the fantasy game where a typical regiment of troops occupies a relatively large dollop of the gaming area and models start the game virtually within spitting distance (and boy can those Dwarfs spit). As a result, big Warhammer games rarely have a sense of grand manoeuvre. Warmaster is very different.

Right from the start I set out to create a game that was about huge armies fighting over vast landscapes; a game in which snaking columns of hundreds of warriors might march along dusty roads towards a vista of farms, villages and towns, where flanking forces can gallop out of sight of their commanders and reappear at the enemy's back, and where artillery pieces must be laboriously dragged to within range of their targets. Part of this vision of hugeness are 'big' tabletop landscapes: roaring rivers rather than piddly little streams, fortified towns rather than one or two pokey houses, and enclosed valleys and rolling hills rather than the usual flattish field punctuated by a lonely tree.

So, huge battles then – but how? The obvious thing to do is to use smaller scale models, effectively shrinking the size of a regiment and making more use of the area available on the tabletop. Warmaster models are about 10mm tall for a human-sized warrior, which is just about big enough to show off the character of the race without being too small to paint. A Warmaster battlefield can easily accommodate many hundreds, even thousands, Warmaster is a game about generalship rather than the prowess of individual warriors. It is a game where strategy counts far more overall than the fate of individual warriors or even individual regiments. The most important parts of a Warmaster army are units of troops. In the game rules these are divided into the following types: infantry, cavalry, chariots, monsters, artillery and machines. Units in Warmaster are always of a fixed size, varying only slightly from one troop type to another. A typical unit consists of three ‘troop stands’, a stand being a 40x20mm plastic base onto which rows or strips of warriors are fixed. Some units come in units of two or even just one stand, but human-sized troops are represented by a unit of three stands in most cases.

All of the different troop types have therefore more impressive than their Warhammer cousins – Warmaster Giants are indeed gigantic compared to ordinary troops and Dragons actually tower menacingly over the poor infantry in an appropriately terrifying manner.

Although troops are the most conspicuous portion of all the armies, characters are important too. They have little fighting value but their role on the battlefield is vital nonetheless. In fact, the key to successful Warmaster generalship is in the way players use their characters. Character models are also fixed onto stands – the character model plus his aides, messengers, runners, guards and associated hangers-on on the same stand in whatever quantity the player feels appropriate. There are three kinds of characters: Generals, Wizards, andHeroes, and a single ‘character’ pack contains an assortment of metal models sufficient to make at least one stand of each.

As you would expect, the armies are based upon the known races and histories of the Warhammer world as developed and described in the Warhammer game. The variety and types of warriors have been modified appropriately to take account of the different scale. In 10mm scale the difference between a Troll Slayer, Giant Slayer and Daemon Slayer isn’t worth worrying about so we just have Slayers. Similarly, the profusion of similar troop types in Warhammer is something of an unnecessary luxury in Warmaster where individual prowess takes second place to strategy, and a sword is 5mm long at best.
move is vastly different and forms the most important aspect of the game. Where Warhammer is undeniably a game about fighting, Warmaster is a game about generalship and manoeuvre. Where Warhammer games are won or lost in the Combat phase, Warmaster games are usually decided when the armies move.

There is no 'move phase' as such - instead the player moves his army in his 'command phase'. In the command phase each character can issue orders to units nearby and a unit can move when it receives an order. To give an order the player takes a dice test and, if this is passed, the unit can be moved. A character can give the same unit several orders in succession, so it is possible to move a unit several times during the same turn. Theoretically a unit can be given a whole series of orders and moved right from one side of the table to the other. Theoretically that is! In practice that rarely, if ever, happens because of the checks and balances worked into the system.

When a test to give an order is failed the message is assumed to have been lost, the runners have been captured, or the General's plans have been lost in the fog of war. A unit cannot be given orders by different characters in the same turn, so a failed order will bring a unit's move to a halt. As a result it isn't possible to be certain of moving all of the units in the army during the turn, so other units will probably not move at all. Furthermore, if the General fails to give an order no further orders can be given by any characters that turn, not even by characters that haven't given orders so far.

To allow the armies to keep coherent battle lines, units are allowed to form into brigades which move as a body and which require only a single order to move. Some troops are more amenable to this than others - being brigaded with a unit of Trolls is never a good thing, for example. Another way in which units can function without orders is by using their 'initiative'. Units that are very close to the enemy at the start of their turn are allowed to move by using their initiative, so you don't need to issue orders to units that already have the enemy 'in their sights'.

Needless to say, issuing orders can be made more difficult by various factors. These include the distance between the character giving the order and the unit he wishes to move, the number of times the unit has already moved that turn, the presence of dense terrain, the proximity of enemy troops to the unit, and loss of enthusiasm due to casualties the unit has suffered. These things mean that the positioning of characters is every bit as important as the positioning of troops, as the characters form points from which the battle is orchestrated.

Shooting and combat are both conducted in a similar way. Each stand of troops can strike a number of attacks at a time and can take a number of hits before it is destroyed. Most stands also have an armour saving throw in much the same way as in Warhammer. The average value for hits and attacks is 3, so, for example, a stand of Empire Halberdiers has 3...
A novel aspect of Warmaster is that combats are worked out in their entirety during the Combat phase. A round of combat is fought, then losers retreat, victors pursue, and a further round of combat is fought until either one side is destroyed or until the victorious side declines to press its advantage and either holds its ground or falls back. The effect of this is to telescope the effect of combat once troops are committed – the result will almost certainly be decisive. As a consequence, players must be very careful before sending a unit into the fray. Well co-ordinated attacks are the answer, with combat bonus attacks available for units which charge or pursue, and penalties for troops facing terrifying foes or fighting enemies to their side or rear. Infantry can also offer support to adjacent stands, which gives them a bonus when determining which side wins the combat.

The aim of the game is, as always, to grind the enemy into the dirt and jump up and down on his mangled corpse. Warmaster achieves this by means of a points value system which is used to choose armies and to calculate which side has won at the end of the battle. The game can be played for a pre-determined number of turns or until one side has lost half its number of units – points are then added up and the side inflicting the most damage on the enemy is the winner. The loss of one side’s General will also bring the battle to a halt.

The rulebook also includes a selection of scenarios. These can be played with any army although they are based on encounters between specific armies. Armies can attempt to raze, enemy settlements, capture enemy convoys, relieve sieges, kidnap travelling princesses and perform other suitably heroic feats. One interesting aspect of the game which is ably demonstrated by the ‘Confederacy of Sigmar’ scenario is that it is perfectly possible to play with several players on the same side with different players representing individual characters. It is also possible to play two or more distinct armies on the same side, an allied Empire and Dwarf force, for example. This makes Warmaster ideal for playing team games. It also has the added advantage that a newcomer can join a big battle with as little as one character and two or three units of troops.

Wizards and magic are represented by means of a selection of spells for each race (apart from Dwarfs who disapprove of such things!) and magic items. Magic doesn’t play the hugely destructive roll in Warmaster that it can do in Warhammer but it can still swing the battle in favour of the player who uses it wisely. Both spells and magic items reflect the importance of grand tactics, and tend to move units, prevent them moving, or impede their ability to fight rather than inflicting casualties. There is at least one spell for each race that is a simple missile attack, but these are best used in combination with conventional shooting to enhance its effect. Magic items have been designed to offer momentary bonuses either to combat effectiveness or a character’s ability to give orders.

As well as rules covering battles, the rulebook also includes a commentary on umpired games, suggestions how to organise and play campaigns, rules for building up veteran units from game to game, and rules for using fortresses, siege equipment, ships and boats. These are too detailed to describe here, but are mostly presented as ideas for players to consider and decide whether to adopt them in the form presented or modify them to suit themselves.

Oh, and you can get an entire army in a carrying case too!

Complete army lists for six awesome armies: Empire, Undead, Chaos, Orcs, High Elves and Dwarfs.

Comprehensively illustrated with artwork and photographs.
Once per battle the Tomb King has the power to increase the attacks of all stands in one unit within 20cm by +1.

As the army General, the Tomb King has the highest Command value in the Undead army.

The most useful and deadly spell at the Liche Priest’s disposal is Raise Dead. Check out this month’s battle report to see why!

Millennia ago, the Land of the Dead was home to the Khemrians, the first civilisation of Men. These people were ruled by kings whose power was so great that they were destined to rule beyond death; to rise from their colossal pyramid tombs at the appointed time thanks to the powerful sorceries of their servants, the Liche Priests.

The civilisation was desolated by the fury of Nagash, the most powerful of the Liche Priests, who usurped the throne for himself. Nagash was insanely jealous of the kings who would rise again after death whilst he and his fellow Liche Priests were doomed to annihilation. When, after a long and cruel reign, Nagash himself was overthrown, he used his magic to destroy the entire land. His foul sorcery wiped out the population and then, with the Great Spell of Awakening, he raised the dead inhabitants into a state of undeath.

The Undead of Khemri are doomed to eternal conflict, unable to finally rest, as those destroyed one day are risen again the next in a perpetual cycle of torment. The armies of the Old World tremble when the Undead march, for what greater terror can there be but an enemy which cannot know fear.
SKELETON WARRIORS

The Undead army is a challenging one to play in Warmaster. Although the basic Skeleton troops, the infantry, archers and cavalry, are less effective in combat compared to their living counterparts, they cost much fewer points and so tend to outnumber their opponents. Also, because they never experience the weak emotions of puny mortals, their fighting ability is unaffected when in combat with terrifying troops such as Dragons. They are immune to panic, so never suffer from the Confusion rule and are not at all affected by the close presence of enemy troops, so the -1 Command penalty for enemy within 20cm is also ignored.

Skeleton warriors are a difficult foe to completely eradicate, as the Licbe Priests tend to raise more and more during the course of a battle! One of the Licbe Priests' most deadly spells is Raise Dead. It can only be cast if there is a combat within 30cm of the Priest, as its main ingredients are fresh corpses, but if successful, three Skeleton infantry stands are placed immediately into combat. Many a General's battleplan has been ruined by this evil spell...

As with all chariots in Warmaster, Undead chariots are deadly against units caught in the open. The crew are also armed with bows, enabling them to make shooting attacks.

A colossal bone crossbow, the Bone Thrower fires darts so heavy that they skewer not only the target stand but also up to three stands unlucky enough to be directly behind!

Hurling magical screaming skulls at the enemy, the Skull Chukka is very effective for confusing target units.

The Tomb King and Licbe Priests are blessed with high Command values. They are vital to the success of a battle because the horde of shambling Undead cannot move and need to be commanded even to charge. Here, a Tomb King and his Licbe Priest minions lead their Undead warriors into war.

Although most of the Undead army consists of its Skeleton warriors, bowmen and cavalry, these are supported by powerful monsters brought to life by the power of the Liche Priests' sorcery. No Undead army is complete without at least one of these monstrosities.

4 attacks, 3 hits and 3+ armour make the Sphinx a lethal opponent to face on the field of battle. Not content with this nasty stat-line, the Sphinx also causes terror in living foes!

As with other Undead, Carrion can't use initiative, but due to their ability to fly they can always return to a character at the start of the Command phase (no order is needed to do this).
The Undead army is powerful on the tabletop and relatively easy to paint – a damn fine combination as far as I’m concerned! It is mainly made up of Skeleton infantry, archers and cavalry with a smattering of more unusual and extremely useful monsters and artillery. The bulk of the army paints up well using a dry-brushing technique over a black undercoat (the Warmaster book shows you how) whilst the bigger monsters reward careful detailing. Skeletons aren’t great troops and have a relatively low points value – so you’ll need a lot of them! A couple of extra units will prove handy when you cast the ‘Raise Dead’ spell (and you will!).

In action, the difference between the Undead and mortal armies is considerable. Undead units need to be given orders to do everything – they never act on initiative (they’re dead – they don’t have any!). This makes a slow plod forward by far the safest option, though it’s perfectly feasible to strike against exposed or vulnerable enemy units with the fast moving Carrion. Coordinating your attacks with magic support is the key to victory with the Undead.

With your first Warmaster models lovingly clutched in your sweaty palms, you’re ready to base them up and get painting – but wait! Due to their size and the way they’ll eventually sit on a base we recommend painting each strip before attaching them to their base (although in these examples we’ve used unpainted models because we are, at heart, lazy gits!). Sit back as we run through the fundamentals of basing up your Warmaster army...

Most infantry and cavalry stands comprise of two strips glued side by side. Infantry are placed facing the long edge of the base (put any strips with standards at the front) and cavalry face the short edge, as shown here. Make sure both strips are facing the same direction, of course!

Infantry archers are assembled slightly differently. Archer units follow a similar formation to other infantry, so you must carefully clip the strips in half and place the archer models facing the base’s long edge.

Artillery pieces are mounted lengthways on a base, like cavalry. The crew must be clipped from their strip but can be arranged on the base in any way you want. Here is an example of how a High Elf bolt thrower can be based.

CHARACTERS

Character models come in blister packs containing an assortment of strips, each with a number of individual models. These must be separated with clippers.

A single blister pack will provide enough models to make a variety of character stands to represent your General, Wizards or Heroes. Each character model must be placed on a separate base (it doesn’t matter which base edge they face as this doesn’t affect game play). The other pieces can be stuck on the base representing the character’s messengers, personal standard bearers, bodyguards or lackeys. You can have great fun designing your own individual character stands to suit the style of your army.
Here are several examples of how the different types of troop models found in Warmaster are based.

CHARACTERS
The High Elves are famed for their craftsmanship, poetry and arcane knowledge, as well as their expertise in the arts of war. This proud race dwells on the isle of Ulthuan, whose cities of soaring spires and gleaming towers are the envy of the world. They once ruled the Old World before centuries of conflict with the Dwarfs forced them to retreat across the seas. Their power was further weakened when their island kingdom was ravaged by civil war against what were to become the Dark Elves, who had turned to the gods of evil in those troubled times. The Dark Elves were driven westward to Naggaroth after a bloody struggle and the High Elves distanced themselves from the world, content to study the mystical lore of their ancestors on their island refuge.

Now, the High Elves remain an aloof race. They are proud of their heritage and still feel embittered towards the Dwarfs. Their hatred, however is reserved for the forces of evil which overran the Old World after the dominant power of the Elves was broken.

A High Elf General is blessed with a Command value of 10, the highest in Warmaster. This represents both his troops’ discipline and his own expertise and schooling in the art of war.

High Elf Heroes add +1 to one unit’s attacks and have a command range of 60cm. Capable of riding into battle on chariots, Giant Eagles or Dragons they can lend their support to units anywhere on the battlefield.

As masters of sorcery, High Elf Wizards may re-roll any failed spellcasting dice. This makes them much more potent than say a Goblin Shaman or a Human Wizard.
Spearmen form the core of any High Elf army. Massed ranks of spearmen supported by archers make a formidable opponent, especially if deployed defending an obstacle or higher ground as it is harder to hit an opponent who uses cover to his advantage.

High Elf chariots receive a +2 attack bonus when charging an opponent in the open. This makes them a fearsome prospect to face and focuses a player's attention on the battlefield terrain as much as his troops.

Silver Helm Knights are the shock troops of the High Elf army. Their excellent 4+ armour save and 30cm move give them staying power and mobility on the tabletop.
MISSILE TROOPS

The High Elves are renowned for the accuracy of their archers. Trained in the art of archery as soon as they can walk, this race surpasses all others at shooting. One of the first things the enemy of the High Elves experiences on the battlefield is the steady rain of missile fire cutting down his troops. A spell mastered by the High Elf Mages is Heaven's Rain, which blesses a unit of archers with the ability to fire twice as fast as normal. Faced with such a torrent of arrows, the enemy can do little but driven back while the Silver Helms charge forward to finish them off.

High Elf Reavers are a potent mixture of speed and missile fire. Although not as heavily armoured as Silver Helms, their high mobility means the Reavers are adept at harrying the flanks of the enemy with a withering rain of arrows.

The Elven Bolt Thrower, also known as the Reaper, can fire not just one but three shots at the same time, and such volleys can easily devastate entire ranks of troops.

Famed for the accuracy of their shooting, High Elf Archers, mounted Reavers and Bolt Throwers all receive a +1 bonus to hit their targets. Back this up with a Wizard casting Heaven’s Fire (effectively allowing the unit to shoot twice in the turn it is cast) and it is easy to see how High Elf missile fire is feared the world over.
FLYING CREATURES

The High Elves can summon numerous flying creatures to aid them in battle – whole wings of Giant Eagles and ferocious Dragons. This means that they can make swift attacks from the sky or lightning outflanking manoeuvres to take the enemy by surprise.

Bonded from birth, Dragon and rider react as one on the battlefield. High Elf Generals, Heroes and Wizards may take to the skies atop one of these mighty creatures.

In addition to their obvious ability to fly, Dragons cause terror, add 3 to the rider’s attacks and also belch fire onto their enemies – what more could you want?

The Giant Eagles of the Annulii mountains are valiant allies who aid the High Elves in battle. Their 100cm movement allows them to disrupt the enemy’s brigades early in the battle.

High Elf Generals, Heroes and Wizards may take to the skies on the back of a noble War Eagle. This has the advantage of increasing the rider’s attacks by 2 and also allows them to soar from unit to unit inspiring their troops to victory.

The fantastic new plastic Sentinel kit is here! We take a look at some of the many roles the hardy Sentinel scout walker performs on the battlefield.

The Sentinel is a one-man all-terrain vehicle, used by the Imperial Guard and certain planetary defence forces. Originally designed as a light scout vehicle for reconnaissance and guard duty, the Sentinel is often pressed into battlefield service. Its superior mobility and speed is used to provide close infantry support and its firepower can be deployed rapidly in response to any threat.

The main role of the Sentinel is reconnaissance so they are always in the vanguard of the main army. They provide detailed telemetry of enemy troop movements and installations. Due to their operational nature, Sentinel pilots spend a lot of their time alone in the field, often days at a time watching the enemy. Because of this, the pilots are chosen for their ability to act on their own initiative. These qualities, often allied with a dangerously individual spirit, means that they have acquired something of a reputation as insubordinate mavericks. This reputation has endeared Sentinel pilots to the regular Imperial Guard infantrymen. If they are in a tight spot and there is a Sentinel nearby, they know they can always rely on the pilot for support. Indeed, there have been many cases when a Sentinel’s timely intervention has stalled or even turned an enemy advance.

Another of the Sentinel’s duties is raiding and surprise attacks. Take for instance those Sentinels operating under Commander Mussby (also known as Mussby’s Raiders) from the 19th Tallarn Regiment, during the pacification of Vargan III. Commander Mussby led his Sentinel squadrons on a series of long range patrols deep behind Ork lines. His raids on Ork ammo dumps, columns and encampments helped shorten the war by months.

Sentinels are also employed as roving guard units at Imperial Command installations or large supply bases. They patrol the perimeter of the base and are the first line of defence in an attack. Their durable armour and anti-personnel weaponry buy time until the Imperial Guard garrison is mustered.

Although the Sentinel is primarily a light scout walker it fulfils many roles. Thanks to its practical design and the skill of its pilots, the Sentinel is equal to most tasks. Almost every Imperial Guard regiment utilises the Sentinel in some other way, as well as its reconnaissance role. As mentioned before, the Tallarns use them for long range patrols. The Iron Guard of Mordian use Sentinels for guard duty and the Valhallans and Cadians for close infantry support.
Even the elite Imperial Guard Storm Trooper regiments are known to employ Sentinels and they maintain several squadrons. They are used in operations where firepower is needed over stealth. The Sentinel is tough enough to be drop-podded alongside the Storm Trooper jump squads and is manoeuvrable enough to keep pace with them through the most rugged terrain. This gives the Storm Troopers much needed heavy support when taking and holding well guarded objectives.

A special mention must be made of the Sentinels used by Catachan and other Deathworld Veteran armies. Due to the impassable terrain these armies fight in, Deathworld Veterans have no use for the armoured vehicles used by the more regular Imperial Guard armies. Instead they favour the hardy Sentinel scout walker. They are used as roving hunter-killer units, utilising heavy flamers and chainsaws to obliterate knots of resistance. Deathworld Sentinels are also heavily modified by their pilots, boasting extra armour, camouflage and other innovations. A common modification by the Catachans and many other more regular Imperial Guard regiments is to fit hunter-killer missiles to the walker’s hull to augment its firepower.

The Sentinel scout walker’s success comes from its ability to be modified to any given battlefield situation, making it one of the most versatile units in the Imperial Guard army.

Games Day UK 1999 Mega Display

Vengeance of the

WARHAMMER
Undoubtedly the centrepiece at Games Day UK 1999 was the awesome ‘Vengeance of the Vampire’ display. This epic battle scene measures over 22 feet long and 10 feet wide, and took over three months to make. Using thousands of models (there are 2,000 Zombies alone) the game depicts the epic struggle between the forces of the Undead, led by the Vampire Antoine von Carstein, returned to exact revenge upon Maximillian von Klaus, the mayor of the fortified Empire town of Stuttburg.

The story behind the display can easily be followed by just looking at the battle scenes as they unfold. The best thing about it though are the small touches. You can spend hours spotting dozens of great sub-plots happening all over the display, such as the Dwarf Nautilus being attacked by a monster from the deep, or the lone crossbowman holed up in the barn surrounded by a horde of Undead.

Games Workshop staff take a closer look at the display at Games Day 1999 before the doors are opened to the hordes of frenzied gamers.

Even this massive display is dwarfed by the crowds of eager gamers taking a closer look.

Maximillian von Klaus stretched his arms out as far as he could and yawned expansively. The weight of his chains of office shifted uncomfortably around his neck. A few points cracked as he stretched.

Forty years ago, von Klaus had been a redoubtable warrior, the finest Grand Master of the Knights of the Blazing Sun. He had strode amongst the battlefields of the Empire, killing mutants, beastmen and... the Undead. He shivered despite the midday sun and pulled his robes closer. From the bowels of his soul, blackness welled up as the fear took hold of him again.

"One day, when you are old and weak, mortal, we shall return for you."

Maximillian stared once again at those terrible, hating eyes, the eyes that looked at him every minute of his life.

"We shall return for you. We shall drink of you. We shall revenge our beloved Elysabeth!"

He looked out once more from his golden armour at the foul leech-thing. Even as his men destroyed the Vampire's mansions around him, he knew terror for the first time. The Vampire Lord dissolved into mist and six knights' swords passed through it harmlessly. The cloud spread, thinning, sifting through the littered corpses of the battlefield, but that terrible whispering voice spoke torments to von Klaus.

"We shall bleed you and your Empire dry and when we have finished, you will be one of us. Your rotting flesh will be a feast for the crows and worms but you shall not rest. You will suffer an eternity of horror, Maximillian von Klaus. In forty years, we shall find you. We shall kill you. We will kill your sons, your people, your whole pitiful Empire."

The mayor returned to his senses. He staggered out across the market place towards the statue of Manann, the god of the sea. Forty years ago, he was in his prime. Now, he was old and weary. He had a pain in his chest and arthritis. But perhaps, perhaps the Vampire would forget him. Perhaps it had been killed itself. Perhaps the rumours of the Undead horde ravaging the Empire were just that. Rumours spread by small-minded peasants around the fire at the local alehouse.

A horn sounded at the gates of the city, several more answered outside the walls. Von Klaus turned to see a column of halberdiers enter the town in the colours of Talabecland. At their head rode a stern-faced man wearing a monocle and dressed in expensive cloth. Upon seeing him, the man rode towards the mayor and saluted.

"Reiksmarshall Wilhelm Hague of Talabecland. You are the Herr von Klaus?"

Maximillian nodded dumbly.

"Jolly good. Mayor von Klaus, we haven't much time. I have with me four hundred men and two hundred horses. More troops are on the way from all over the Empire at the Emperor's wish and under my command. We have already begun to dig some defenses outside the city for the artillery units. Raise your city guard! The foul fiends will soon be here!"

"Foul fiends?" replied von Klaus.

"Haven't you heard?"

"Heard what?"

"The Undead are coming, mayor. Apparently for you!"

The Battle of Schrolnatz Plain saw the defeat of the Vampire. Antoine von Carstein at the hands of a huge Empire force commanded by Maximillian von Klaus, in the year IC 2462. Von Carstein was on the verge of destroying the Empire before Emperor Wilhelm III united the Elector Counts against him. Von Klaus and his bodyguard of Knights of the Blazing Sun defeated the Vampire in the midst of a huge engagement, while the Undead legions were destroyed with cannon and volley gun fire. Antoine von Carstein swore revenge against von Klaus, his family and the Empire itself.

For forty years, von Carstein lacked his wounds and plotted his revenge. He rebuilt his hordes corpore and corpore, nursing his anger until he could taste it upon his cold, pointed tongue.

His shambling legions jutted out of Sylvania once more in the year 2505. Von Carstein moved cautiously, first choosing small villages to test his armies against, adding the slain as new troops, fresh from the grave. The rotted faces of distant cousins slaughtered whole towns and soon rumours spread to the court of the Emperor Karl Franz of the return of the Vampire Lord. Witch Hunters and spies were sent. Some, very few, returned with news of thousands of Empire citizens bound beyond death to fight for the foul Lord of Necromancers riding openly through the countryside, and of strange horsemen searching the countryside for one man — Maximillian von Klaus.

By now, whole cities were being destroyed and Emperor Karl Franz mobilised troops from the states of Talabecland, Strijand, Avrindland and Ostermark to make a stand at the home of the former hero of the Empire, the fortified harbour town of Stuttburg. The Emperor even sent a detachment of his elite guard from Altdorf aboard the Imperial Greatship, 'Pride of Sigmarr.'

The Empire forces were commanded by Wilhelm Hague, an idiosyncratic man but a fine commander, who managed to organise a considerable defence in the scant few hours he had before the Undead hordes descended upon Stuttburg.

The midday sky turned black as thousands of bats and insects descended upon Stuttburg and storm clouds raked the sky, bringing the darkness of night to previously beautiful day. The sea itself churned and thrust itself against the harbour walls, disgorging its victims, the corpses and souls of the sailors and townsfolk who had drowned within its stomach. Long dead fathers and sons sought out their wives and children, stumbling down streets and clawing at doors, some dripping from jawless mouths. Antoine von Carstein himself breached the town at the Sigmar Gate, his Wight Lord slaying the brave defenders with their putrescent weapons. Behind him, Dire Wolves ran, hastening down the streets and clawing at doors, Prime feasting on the dead and dying Standing in the town square, Antoine von Carstein roared out the name of the mayor, commanding him to come forth and stand before him. As he had at the Battle of Schrolnatz.

The water was whipped into a chaotic boiling by the thrashing of the giant serpent's death throes as another boom sounded out across the swamp. The screech of raucous birds and yammering of arboreal mammals added to the cacophony. As the ferocious bubbling subsided, an oily sheen of alien blood spread across the marsh pool's surface. Lieutenant Green handed the still-smoking shotgun back to Sergeant Barnes and hauled himself out of the waist-deep water, grasping onto a twisting tree root to aid himself.

"We better get moving," Green told his platoon, scratching at eight days' worth of stubble greying his face. "All this racket might attract some unwanted attention."

Pushing his way through the undergrowth a few yards from the swamp, Green pulled a tattered parchment map from his belt and spread it out over the large purplish leaf of a bush. Squinting at the tiny notes scrawled along the edges of the map, Green ran a finger along the faint red line of a trail.

"Okay, get in contact with Toothpick and tell him to find us a route north," Lieutenant Skorp told Green, pushing himself upright and signalling to Barnes.

"Got a message from Company command, Lieutenant," Skorp reported, pulling the headset down around his neck.

"What's up?" asked Green, wiping beads of sweat from his forehead with the back of his hand.

"A shuttle has had an accident; they think the crash site is just a few miles north of here," Skorp told him.

"And?" Green replied with a shrug.

"They want us to get up there and secure the wreck while they send a shuttle to rescue the survivors."

"Okay, go in contact with Toothpick and find the crash site," Lieutenant Green told Skorp, pushing himself upwards and signalling to Barnes.

"There was something else, sir," Skorp continued in a quiet voice. "As the shuttle came down the pilot reported seeing an enemy force moving in our way."

"Any more good news?" Green asked, with a deep sigh.

"Nope, that's it," Skorp replied with a grin.

The shuttle crash site was easy to find; the craft's headlong descent had smashed a swath through the trees fifty yards wide and nearly two hundred yards long. The shuttle itself was about thirty feet long. Its angular nose was crumpled like paper against a wedge of dug up dirt and shattered tree trunks. The landing ship's wings had sheared off roughly twenty yards before the wreck had slowed to a halt, and a fire blazed fitfully amidst the splintered trees where the fuel from the starboard wing had been ignited by sparks.

"Damned map's so old it's useless!" General Absolam Berin, pilot first class! the man replied in a taunting voice, his eyes fixed on the blade by his throat. Green released his grip and gently pushed the pilot back into the shuttle, sheathing his knife as he did so.

"Okay," Green reassured the young man, "ain't nothing to worry about now. We'll take care of you. How many of you survived the crash?"
gaze into his eyes, his eyes filled with the throats he had cut his right hand straying to the ‘gutslicer’ pentodes were inked in red, blue and symbols, numbers, hexagons and multi-coloured tattoos. Arcane shoulder. His head and face were purple across every inch of skin down to his neck. A small scab of blood showed where he had cut his right temple during the crash landing. The psyker’s eyes were purple as well, and as his gaze met Green’s, the Catachan Lieutenant had to steel himself to meet its unearthly stare.

“Ah, Gabriel,” the Arch-Diviner said, smiling warmly. “Thank you for your assistance.”

“You know me?” Green asked, taken aback by Nostradimicus’ familiarity. “I know many things, Lieutenant,” the psyker replied with a half-smile.

“Stay out my head,” snarled Green, his hand straying to the ‘gutslicer’ knife hung on his right hip.

“I am truly sorry,” Nostradimicus apologised, taking a step back and raising both his hands in a placating gesture. “You project yourself like a beacon guiding a ship home. I could not help but detect some of your thoughts. You have a very strong mind. For an Ungifted…”

“Well, warlock, in future just you ignore them,” Green warned the psyker with a growl.

They had made good progress through the jungle, despite the constant whining and stumbling of Del Rio. Toothpick had found a hill a couple of miles from the crash site, and as Green and his wards approached, the Lieutenant could see his men quickly making a bivouac to camp down in.

“Barnes!” Green called to the heavily scarred Sergeant of First Squad. “I want you and your men to lay a perimeter fifty paces from the camp. Cover everywhere, I don’t want any surprises in the night.”

Barnes signalled an affirmative with a thumbs up and then rounded up his men and began handing out tripwires and explosive charges. Green saw them spreading out through the woods. As he entered the camp, the Lieutenant found Skorp.

“Any news on that zipper?” he asked, casting a practised eye over the bent branches and leatly roofs of the improvised camp. Everything seemed to be in order.

“The Captain said the crash location has been relayed to the Naval liaison,” the commo-man informed him. “They’ll contact the Captain when they’re ready to launch.”

“Keep me posted on any developments,” the Lieutenant told Skorp. If he was going to have to drag the witch and the aristo through leagues of jungle to the base, he wanted to know as soon as possible.

Some of the men had their camp burners out — small heather-cum-cookers which used an energy cell to warm a special ceramic plate, producing no glow or smoke that could be detected by an enemy or any local predators. They were cheerfully stripping and gutting the yellowbacks they’d hunted earlier; three-foot long lizards that were found all through the jungles of Darwin II and the staple of the planet’s food chain — for humans as well as other predators. Green spied Toothpick grilling a yellowback steak on the end of one of his knives over the plate of a burner. Pushing through the bright green leaves of a crawling bush, the Lieutenant sat next to the patrol Sergeant. With a slight feeling of consternation, Green realised that Del Rio and Nostradimicus had followed him, seated themselves on a moss-encrusted log on the other side of the burner. He saw the pilot, Berin, snacking on a ratan pack he'd brought with him, sitting talking to Barker's squad.

"How's it going, Toothpick?" Green asked, pulling some yellowback meat from a pouch at his belt and driving his 'dicer' through its centre.

"Been a hard couple of days," the Sergeant replied, rubbing the sweat off his bald pate with his forearm. "Been moving fast, and this is some thick bush. Thickest I've seen outside Death Valley back on Catachan."

Green was about to agree when Del Rio interrupted.

"Toothpick? What kind of name is that?" the attaché asked, leaning forward and sniffing at the steaming yellowback.

"Ain't my real name," Toothpick grunted, pretending to concentrate on the meal he was cooking.

"Shall I tell them?" offered Green with a short laugh. "It was on Oho where Sergeant Murke learnt his title. We were fighting this horde of greenskins, really feral ones at that. Seemed they didn't have any of their engineers, so they were using spears and bows for the most part, and huge clubs made from wood and sharpened bone. They also had these short hunting spears, with a head about as broad as your palm. Now, Sergeant Murke here kept calling them toothpicks, saying they were about that effective in a fight. In the end, we spent our whole lives worrying about them, because this time you managed to get away with it. So we make a joke about the whole thing."

"How interesting," murmured Del Rio, his lazy-eyed expression betraying the insincerity of his words.

Fat from the yellowback was hissing and spitting, and Green held it to his nose for a second to smell it. Satisfied that it was done, he was about to take a bite when he noticed Del Rio's eyes staring at the flesh on the Lieutenant's knife.

"Didn't you bring any supplies from the shuttle?" Green asked, lowering the dicer.

"We thought you would have supplies," the attaché replied with a confused wrinkle of his sweat-beaded brow.

"You're quite welcome to some yellowback," answered Green, proffering the lizard meat towards the Darwin noble with obvious relish at his reaction. "Can't promise that it'll taste as nice as an Imperial Commander's banquet."

"I have a few sweetmeats that should suffice until our rescuers arrive," Del Rio said haughtily, his eyes still taut by the sight of the yellowback on the end of Green's knife.

"Nostradimicus?" offered Green, watching the lizard towards the Scholasticas Psykana adept.

"Nostradimicus' offered the Lieutenant, trying the lizard meat towards the Scholasticas Psykana adept. "You've got to understand something." Green told the attaché. "You don't live in the jungle, your settlements are city-sized rockete bunkers on stilts so it's just the same as any other town. We're from the deep bush. You can't stay too long in one place on Catachan; it'll take about five years before the trees and plants just grow right back and swamp up the buildings. It's like the whole planet is constantly trying to get rid of you."

"How's it going, Toothpick?" Green asked, lowering the dicer.

"We've set spring and shredder mines all around the base of the hill," the Sergeant reported. "Knotts and Paine are in the treetops to the west and east, ready to signal if they see anything. Anybody who tries to come in here is going to trip something off and they're all linked together so we'll know they go up it'll be like the Aesculapian celebrations!"

"Good," Green thanked the Sergeant. "I don't know how long before we need to start moving to the pick-up location, so you and your men get some rest while you can. Toothpick's squad will be on first watch."

The night fell quickly, and through the few gaps in the jungle canopy Green could see the stars scattered across the cloudless sky. Here, further towards the western galactic spin-orbit than Catachan, the stars were more numerous and densely packed. Many of them were much younger than Catachan's sun. Lieutenant Barnes pushed his way through the green and yellow foliage and squatted next to the Lieutenant.

The pilot, Berin, snacking on a rations stick, looked up at the sky. "It'll take about five years..." he started, before being cut off by a sudden scream from the forest.

enemy had been almost annihilated

by the shock of the attack and their

He passed word round that they were Toothpick's squad scouting ahead as setting them up to cover other trails disappear into the jungle. Leaving

Barnes' squad as a rearguard, Green led his command section from the camp, casting an eye over the ground

Del Rio, while Slanter, his flamethrower man, tagged along with Nostradimus.

The Lieutenant assumed that Berin had been taken under the collective wing of the squad and was busy making for the Boden road, with Barnes' squad as a rearguard. They were through any enemy stupid or unlucky enough to be standing in its direction of fire. Despite the commotion, the jungle was still strangely silent: there were no bird calls or monkeys

chattering to break the night's calm.

The quiet darkness was unnerving to

Green, who was used to the constant

background noise of the wind through the leaves and the insistent drooping

of insects, squawks of birds and growing

of precursors.

"Go out of there just before they arrived," Barnes told Green, nodding

back towards the camp. He was breathing heavily, sweat beading

"They won't be slowed by the traps them," commented Green with a sour poised, until he saw the familiar scarred face of Barnes looking back at him.

Relaxing with a sigh, Green

shuddered his shoulder, and crept towards the Sergeant. More detonations sounded from the now-deserted campsites, and Green could picture the booby traps being set off.

The spring mines, concealed in the

of fire. Despite the commotion, the

jungle was still strangely silent: there

were no bird calls or monkeys

chattering to break the night's calm.

The quiet darkness was unnerving to

Green, who was used to the constant

background noise of the wind through

the leaves and the insistent drooping

of insects, squawks of birds and growing

of precursors.

"Go out of there just before they arrived," Barnes told Green, nodding

back towards the camp. He was grimace, "But they won't be tracking either, so pass the word to move at full speed for the road."

Barnes nodded and then ducked into the bushes, his soft footfalls out of earshot within seconds. Green huddled back to his section, urging them on faster with a wave of his hands. With luck the zimmer would be waiting for them at the road and they'd be able to get on board and leave before the enemy caught up with them. He shuddered as he thought about the foes they were facing. He'd never seen one of the aliens up close. But he'd fought with their minions enough times to convince himself he'd never allow himself to be captured. He wasn't sure what the Sirens did to allow himself to be taken alive, but all of the enemies that Green had faced had been former Guardsmen; mostly Catachans like himself, some others from the Julian Regiment fighting in the mountains to the west. They were like dead things that still walked, their eyes completely devoid of the spark of life, their motions trembling and erratic like dead things that still walked, their limbs moving in jerks as their heads turned. They were like the Undead of children's stories. Green shuddered with the recollection, even as he anxiously glanced back over his shoulder at the trail that passed for the read to the track that passed for the road. The leaves were rustling with the wind beginning to pick up Green fastening his belt so as not to lose his gear. The winds strengthened even more, setting the treetops to howling, the leaves fluttering in the gale. Green heard the first crack of thunder, still a few miles distant. The leaves were too thick to see any lightning. It was amidst this turmoil that Green first became aware of another presence Peering through the darkness, he could see nothing at all but all the same the hairs on the back of his neck, an instinctive reaction to the feeling of being watched by an unseen observer. In the subconscious, he felt another mind close by, seeking for something searching for its prey. He knew the feeling well, for it was a sure sign that at least one of the Sirens, and possibly more, were close by. They used their mind powers to detect their...

position in a matter of minutes, so get ready for some fighting!"

Green unslung his bolt from his shoulder, checked the magazine and loosed the safety. Slabbing a thumb back over his shoulder, he began to work his way towards the Boden road, his command squad following his direction. He caught glimpses of the other squads withdrawing as well. As they approached the road the drumming of the heavy rain could be heard, and Green could see that the dirt track was rapidly turning into a small stream, ripples and splashes being kicked up by the downpour.

Barker was shouting something to Green's right but a thunderclap drowned out the Sergeant's words. Green cupped his ear to indicate that Barker should repeat his message.

"I've... got... movement... to... the... north!" the Sergeant bellowed, using his cupped hands as an impromptu loudhailer. Barker leaned across to help.

"Caught my foot in a damned hole!" shouted Skorp, hauling himself to his feet again. The young Catachan gritted his teeth as he limped on, showing its path across the gloom, and from experience Green knew that taking down the brainless creatures they faced wasn't easy. They retained the barest spark of intelligence and weapons didn't always feel no pain, just as they felt no fear. Lasguns were not the most powerful of weapons, and it usually took several good hits to blow enough parts off the zombie-like things to cripple them. Even then they sometimes wouldn't die, clawing their way forward with shattered arms dragging themselves towards their prey with mindless focus.

His eyes flicking left and right, Green checked down the road. It was with a pang of fear that he noticed a group of creatures moving through the trees about twenty yards to his right. The pouring rain made it impossible to count their exact number, but Green guessed there to be between five and ten of them. If they weren't stopped they would cut off Grave from behind. Mindless they might be, but the aliens controlling them certainly had intelligence. Green thought bitterly.

"Target on the right!" Green called out to his platoon, hefting his bolt over his shoulder, he took aim through the downpour and violently waving branches. He squeezed the trigger softly and felt the bolt kick against his shoulder, accompanied by the distinctive loud "brakka" noise. With the bright spark of its propellant showing its path across the gloom, the bolt streaked over the road. Green watched with satisfaction as the bolt imbedded into the chest of one of the creatures before exploding, punching the zombie several yards back into the bushes and showering near-death flesh through the leaves. The crackle of lasgun fire sounded along the treeline and bolts of light criss-crossed each other as the platoon targeted the alien-possessed Guardsmen.
Looking back at Grave, the Catachan Lieutenant saw that the squad wasHair? dead? hand-to-hand with the enemy, hacking at grogging limbs with their big knives. He saw two of Green's men borne down under the relentless blows of the Mindless, their arms flailing wildly as the creatures pulled the life from them. Grave was trying to wrench his knife free from the raggged hand of another creature when a shrivelled hand punched into his chest, leaving the Sergeant off his feet with unnatural strength and flinging him corpse into the road, gushing down the road. It was over in a few moments, even the hardened Catachans stood little chance against their unfeeling foes, and Green could see that there were over twenty of the things stumbling into the far side of the stream now. There were more of them coming from the left as well, and Green realised they were in a tightening circle of the Mindless. They must have been spread out to find us. Green thought, and now they're closing in for the kill.

With a roar of anger, Green pulled the bolter's firing setting to full auto and held down the trigger to empty the magazine, the harsh muzzle flare lighting up the black faces of the enemies as round after round roared into their close-packed crowd. Larger explosions tore into the zombies as the heavy bolt in Barker's squad fired its fire to Green's, smashing limbs and blasting empty heads apart. More and more of the creatures rammed shambling into view now, their ragged clothing catching on thorny bushes, their feet tripping and stumbling on vines and in potholes. As they stepped from the trees, the Imperial Guardsmen picked them off with seared volleys, of fire. Two dozen cons were being swept down by the storm's rain and ferocious wind, but that number again were continuing their relentless advance, only a few yards from Green's side of the road. To Green's left, Del Rio stood a little distance, an ornate duelling pistol in his right hand; Every shot landed clean, the heavy bullets smashing lumps of leathery skin and emaciated flesh from withered bones. Del Rio paused to load another clip, and then, he looked and shrank back at Green.

"Easier when they're not shooting back!" the Sergeant called, raising his arm again and urging his attention back to the approaching mob. Green didn't have time to ponder the change in the noblemen as he emptied another clip of bolts into the enemy, taking another handful of them down. The Catachans were just holding them back from the treeline, but in another few seconds, they would be suffering the same fate as Grave's squad. Tom apart in brutal hand-to-hand fighting.

Thunder roared loudly, accompanied by a blinding strike of lightning. The thunder seemed to continue, growing louder and louder, while the glare of the lightning did not dissipate. Confused, Green looked up into the sky while he slammed another magazine into his bolter. He gave a short gasp of surprise as his gaze met those of Nostradimicus. The Cathachans were just holding them back from the treeline, but in another few seconds, they would be suffering the same fate as Grave's squad, torn apart in brutal hand-to-hand fighting.

The Possessed. The Damned. The bogeymen. These scum are the worst of the worst. They are dangerous creatures, perhaps more so than any other group in the entire city. This Chaos-worshipping scum consists of mutants, Beastmen and cultists, and even worse things called the Possessed. If you ever let them get close to you, you'll be in big trouble – there are few who are a match for this scum in close quarters.

ORCS AND GOBLINS INVADE MORDHEIM

Foul Greenskins come looking for a fight

Foul Greenskins from the wilderness have been encountered in the ruins searching for bounty. Their preferred tactic is that of attacking the righteous warbands of our Empire to steal their hard earned wealth.

They're tricky opponents, as Orks are as fierce as a Wild Boar and thrive on fighting. The smaller ones known as Goblins are a different story, they'd much rather stab you in the back than fight you face-to-face. We have also had reports of Trolls and other creatures with gaping mouths full of teeth. You have been warned.

BURGHERMEISTER'S DAUGHTER KIDNAPPED BY POSSESSED

The band of Possessed cultists known as The Cabal of the Scarred Pit have kidnapped Anna von Verbeek, the Burghermeister's daughter. Along with the reward for her safe return, a further reward of 300 Gold Crowns has been set for the head of Lord Ernst Barkmann, Magister of the Cabal.

Finally, I have returned. Returned from my epic expedition into the pit, having vanquished all who stood between me and my ultimate goal - the Guard, banisher of Evil! But what do I find on my return? What cruel hand has fate dealt me? That charlatan and rogue, Tuomas Pirinen has usurped several pages of my beloved tome!

It all falls into place now - Pirinen it was who insidiously filled my mind with feverish thoughts of the holy Guard. Yes, once I was hooked he took over a sizeable section of this august organ and plied his heretical trade to all and sundry. No longer will this be the case, however, for I will have no truck with the foul heresies espoused by Mr Pirinen and his band of cronies!

My first, most urgent task was to send the cowardly page-thief scurrying for his worthless life with the Templars of Sigmar hot on his heels (the Grand Theogonist is a personal friend). The second step was to purge this publication of his foul gossip once and for all. To this end, Mordheim has been cast out of White Dwarf forthwith. All is not entirely well, however, for this unholy cabal has taken its idle tongue-wagging underground to become a publication in its own right.

'Town Cryer' will be published by those foul miscreants, the Black Library, every other month and will undoubtedly be packed with more tales of dread from Mordheim. Those tainted followers of goings on in the City of the Damned will no doubt slake their fanatical thirst for such news with this new edition of 'Town Cryer'.

With the sinner cast from within our midst there are now empty pages waiting to be filled. And fill them we will...

Speaks
KIDNAPPED! 4
The Burgbermeister's daughter has been kidnapped by the foul Possessed. Tuomas Pirinen, ye Editor of this journal, looks at how she can be rescued by any warband brave enough to do so.

DA MOB ROOLZ 6
Ores and Goblins have been encountered amongst the ruins. With their natural lust for blood, I can only guess that they have come to Mordheim looking for a fight with one of our brave mercenary warbands. After many months of study, Mark Havener describes the hierarchy of a warband of greenskins.

THE HANDS OF FATE 16
A study of the members of the Possessed warband the Hands of Fate by mad master-physician Aly Morrison.

ABOMINATION 20
The dark followers of the Possessed are growing in strength. New to the ruins this month is a Magister to lead your cult, as well as a terrifying Possessed and a deranged Darksoul.

SHOW ME THE MONEY 24
The taverns in the settlements around Mordheim make good recruitment centres for warriors who can sell their services to the highest bidder. Here, Mark Havener describes two more Hired Swords that have made themselves available to the warbands of Mordheim.

PURGE THE UNECLAN 22
Colin Harvey's Witch Hunters patrol the wicked streets of Mordheim.

WARRIORS OF COLD STEEL 26
A study of the rumours that the Tzar of Kislev has sent a warband to our city. Rotamaster Michael Perry of the Tzar's personal bodyguard takes a closer look.
For Tuomas’ playtest campaign he concocted a special scenario for two of the main protagonists, Paul Sawyer’s Possessed and Jim Butler’s Marienburgers. The scenario has the Marienburgers trying to rescue the Burghermeister’s kidnapped daughter from the Possessed, who intend to sacrifice her to their foul gods. It was such a great scenario that we asked Tuomas to write it up for everyone to have a go. Incidentally, the Marienburgers did rescue the poor girl from Fat Bloke’s clutches.

During the dark hours of Geheimnisnacht, the Possessed cultists revel in an orgy of violence and sacrifice. It is the custom of these warped followers of the Shadowlord to sacrifice a victim for the greater glory of Chaos during the thirteenth hour of Geheimnisnacht. Sometimes they steal away a victim who will be missed by relatives, patrons or masters and a rescue attempt will be made to save the victim from the sacrificial knife.

In this scenario a warband is attempting to rescue the sacrificial victim from the Possessed, while the Possessed are fighting to complete the ritual sacrifice.

Thus one of the warbands in this scenario should be a Possessed warband. The other warband could be of any type, even another Possessed warband!

Terrain

Starting with the attacker, each player takes it in turn to place a piece of terrain, either a ruined building, tower or other major piece of terrain. It is suggested that the terrain is set up within an area roughly 4’x4’. In the middle of the playing area you should set up a piece of scenery representing the sacrificial altar. There should be at least 6” of empty space between the sacrificial altar and the closest building.

A suitable model representing the sacrificial victim should be placed on the altar.

Warbands

The Possessed warband is deployed first and they can be placed anywhere on the table except within 8” of any of the table edges. The warband attempting the rescue must place all its models within 4” of a table edge, out of the sight of any of the Possessed models, with at least one model next to each of the four sides of the table.

Starting the game

The warband attempting to rescue the sacrificial victim automatically has the first turn.

Freeing the sacrificial victim

As long as at least one model in the Possessed warband is in base contact with the victim, the ritual carries on and the sacrificial victim may not move. Note that models knocked down or stunned do not count.

If there are no standing Possessed models in base-to-base contact with the sacrificial victim, he (or she) may try to escape. The victim can move freely, controlled by the player of the warband that is attempting the rescue. The victim may make an immediate move as soon as there are no Possessed models in base contact and after this will move normally in the movement phase of the rescuing warband. The victim escapes if he (or she) moves off any table edge. In this case the game ends (see Finding the game).
Recapturing the sacrificial victim
If any Possessed model moves into base contact with the sacrificial victim (via charge, normal move or running) then the Possessed player has recaptured the victim and may move the model alongside the warrior who recaptured him/her.

Note that when trying to recapture the sacrificial victim the normal interception rules apply, so the Possessed may not charge the sacrificial victim if there are other enemies in the way.

If the Possessed manage to recapture the sacrificial victim and move him (or her) back to the centre of the altar then the victim is sacrificed and the Possessed win the game.

Sacrificial victim
In our own Dark Moon campaign the sacrificial victim was the beautiful daughter of a rich Burghermester, but the victim could equally well be an important Dwarf Runemaster, a Skaven Warlock, the chosen bride of a Vampire, rich merchant, or any other suitable character from your own campaign.

The profile below represents the weakened state of the victim as well as the understandable desire to escape as quickly as possible! Note that neither warband will try to attack the victim with missile fire, spells or by any other means - the victim is too valuable to both of them!

Ending the game
If at the end of the sixth turn the victim has not yet been freed then the Possessed warband automatically wins as the victim is sacrificed.

Otherwise the game ends after both players have completed 12 turns, when either warband is wiped out, the victim is recaptured and sacrificed, or the sacrificial victim escapes via any of the table edges. Note that neither warband routs in this scenario - the stakes are too high!

Experience

+1 Survives. If a Hero or a Henchman group survives the battle they gain +1 Experience.

+1 Winning Leader. The leader of the winning warband gains +1 extra Experience.

+1 For the possession of the sacrificial victim. If the game ends before the sacrificial victim is killed or escapes, then whichever warband is controlling the sacrificial victim at the end of the game gains +1 Experience point which can be given to any Hero in the warband.

+D6 If the victim is sacrificed. If the Possessed manage to sacrifice the victim, the warband gains +D6 Experience points to be freely distributed between the Heroes of the warband. In addition you may roll for the Rewards of the Shadowlord (see optional rules on page 160 of the Mordheim rulebook) for any two Heroes in the Possessed warband if you wish.

+D6 If the sacrificial victim escapes. If the rescuers manage to move the victim off the table then the warband gains D6 experience points distributed freely amongst the Heroes of the warband. In addition the warband will gain a reward of 50 gold crowns added directly into the treasury of the warband.

+1 Per enemy out of action. Any Hero earns +1 Experience for putting an enemy out of action.
Ores enjoy fighting and looting more than anything else. Because of this, an Orc's life is spent in constant battle – either with his fellow Ores or some other enemy. With its wealth of opponents and loot ready for the taking, Mordheim offers the perfect opportunity for an aspiring Orc Warboss to prove himself. What follows are complete rules, written by Mark Havener, for Orc and Goblin warbands.

Among the races of the Warhammer world, none enjoy the prospect of a good looting more than Ores and Goblins. For this reason many Orc warbands have been drawn to the city of Mordheim and the wyrdstone that lies hidden there. Of course, Ores would much rather ambush other warbands and take their wyrdstone than collect it themselves, but their goals are the same as any other warband – collect as much treasure as possible! These traits are reflected in the following special rules.

Special Rules

Animosity. Ores and Goblins enjoy nothing more than a good scrap, unfortunately they're not always very discerning about who they scrap with! To represent this, at the start of the player's turn, roll a D6 for each Henchman who is either an Orc or a Goblin. A roll of 1 means that the warrior has taken offense to something one of his mates has done or said. Do not roll for models that are engaged in hand-to-hand combat (they're already scrappin’!). To find out just how offended the model is, roll another D6 and consult the following chart to see what happens.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>D6 Result</th>
<th>Effect</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>&quot;I 'Erd Dat!&quot; The warrior decides that the nearest friendly Orc or Goblin Henchman has insulted his lineage or personal hygiene and must pay the price! If there is a friendly Ore or Goblin Henchman or Hired Sword within charge reach (if there are multiple targets within reach, choose the one nearest to the mad model), the offended warrior will immediately charge and fight a round of hand-to-hand combat against the source of his ire. At the end of this round of combat, the models will immediately move 1” apart and no longer count as being in close combat (unless one of them fails another Animosity test and rolls this result again). If there are no friendly Ore or Goblin Henchmen or Hired Swords within charge reach, and the warrior is armed with a missile weapon, he immediately takes a shot at the nearest friendly Ore or Goblin Henchman or Hired Sword. If none of the above applies, or if the nearest friendly model is an Orc Hero, the warrior behaves as if a 2-5 had been rolled on this chart. In any case, the warrior in question may take no other action this turn, though he may defend himself if attacked in hand-to-hand combat.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2-5</td>
<td>&quot;Wud Yoo Say?&quot; The warrior is fairly certain he heard an offensive sound from the nearest friendly Orc or Goblin, but he's not quite sure. He spends the turn hurling insults at his mate. He may do nothing else this turn, though he may defend himself if attacked in hand-to-hand combat.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>&quot;I'll Show Yer!&quot; The warrior imagines that his mates are laughing about him behind his back and calling him silly names. To show them up he decides that he'll be the first one to the scrap! This model must move as quickly as possible towards the nearest enemy model, charging into combat if possible. If there are no enemy models within sight, the Orc or Goblin warrior may make a normal move immediately. This move is in addition to his regular move in the Movement phase, so he may therefore move twice in a single turn if you wish. If the extra move takes the Orc or Goblin warrior within charge reach of an enemy model, the warrior must charge into close combat during his regular movement.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

Distasteful Company. Many Hired Swords refuse to work for Ores, as they know that Ores are just as likely to eat them as fight alongside them. Ores may only hire the following Hired Swords: Pit Fighters, Ogre Bodyguards or Warlocks.

The lithe figures peered through the foliage at the group in the clearing below. The pair of Wood Elf scouts had been shadowing the Orcs for days, attempting to determine if the small band of creatures was an isolated warband or the scouting party of a larger army. While most beings would not be able to hear the guttural Orc speech from 100 yards away, the keen ears of the Elves allowed the scouts to discern what the creatures were saying. Most of it was nonsense of course, squabbling over some scraps of meat or pretty rocks, but the Elves patiently awaited the words that would reveal the purpose of the foul creatures.

Members of the band loitered about the clearing. Goblins scurried ceaselessly, attempting to avoid the annoyed grasp of their larger Orc cousins. A single Troll slowly wandered around aimlessly in a small circle, digging a groove into the ground where it had been dragging its feet for hours. As the Elves watched, a solidly built Orc with blood covering his arms up to the elbows approached a much larger Orc who was seated on a primitive "throne" of bones and hides. The scouts had already determined that the seated Orc was the leader of the motley group.

"How'd da huntin' go?" asked the Orc Boss.

"Ran iota some 'umies. All dey ad was some black rocks."

"Where's da loot den?" asked the Orc Boss. "All 'umies got loot!"

"Dat's what I asked 'em!" replied the Big 'Un. "Dey tried to tell me dat da rocks WAS da loot! Den after I leans on 'em a bit, dey tells me dat some big boss 'umies pay loads for dis stuff!"

"Loads?"

"Dat's what dey sed," the Big 'Un replied, disbelief plain on his face. "Dey told me da rocks was from dis place called Moretv...Mordh...Mork...well, dey drew us dis map."

The larger Orc grabbed the scrap of parchment his lieutenant had been holding and scanned it for a few quick seconds, then began barking orders. Goblins squealed and ran about the encampment, frantic all packing up the warband's gear. Four huffed and strained as they picked up their leader on his throne and carried him aloft. The Orc warriors were much more composed about the whole affair, and calmly packed up their kits and prepared for the journey ahead.

The scouts faded back into the forest, secure in the knowledge that these Orcs were no threat. They had heard stories about the human city that had treasure supposedly lying on the streets for easy picking. But they had also heard other stories about the city. The Orcs would be dead within a fortnight.

Heroes

1 Orc Boss

80 gold crowns to hire

An Orc Boss is a tough and brutal warrior, who will throw his lads into any fight that he thinks he can profit from. He is the strongest, toughest and most barbaric member of the warband and if any of his Boyz think otherwise, the band may soon find itself with one less member!

0-1 Orc Shaman

40 gold crowns to hire

Orc Shamans are outcasts from Orc society. They are gifted by the Orc gods Gork and Mork with powers they can neither understand nor completely control. Many join roaming Orc warbands where they are no longer shunned for their abilities, but respected for them.

0-2 Orc Big 'Uns

40 gold crowns to hire

Orc society is a savage hierarchy where only the toughest survive and rise through the ranks (often atop the bodies of other challengers). Big 'Uns are such rising stars, and they carry out the orders of the Orc Boss. If the Boss ever falls, it is up to the Big 'Uns to decide on a new leader (usually through personal combat).

Weapons/Armour: Goblins may be armed with weapons and armour chosen from Goblin equipment list.

SPECIAL RULES

Animosity: Goblin Warriors are subject to the rules for Animosity (see Special Rules for details). Note: A Goblin Warrior who fails his Animosity test and rolls a 1 for the result will never charge an Orc Henchman, though he will still use any missile weapons to attack as normal. Goblins are far too afraid of Orcs to challenge them individually.

Not Orcs: Orcs don’t expect much from non-Orcs, and are therefore not unsettled if Goblins or Cave Squigs break or get cut down in battle. In fact, they expect as much from these weaklings! Therefore, when testing to see if an Orc Warband will never charge an Orc Henchman, though he will still use any missile weapons to attack as normal. Goblins are far too afraid of Orcs to challenge them individually.

Weapons/Armour: Trolls do not require weapons to fight but often carry a big club. In any event, Trolls can never be given weapons or armour.

SPECIAL RULES

Fear: Trolls are frightening monsters which cause fear.

Stupidity: A Troll is subject to the rules for stupidity.

Regeneration: Trolls have a unique physiology that allow them to regenerate wounds. Whenever an enemy successfully inflicts a wound on a Troll roll a D6, on a result of 4 or more the wound is ignored and the Troll is unhurt. Trolls may not regenerate wounds caused by fire or fire-based magic. Trolls never roll for Injury after a battle.

Dumb Monster: A Troll is far too stupid to ever learn any new skills. Trolls do not gain experience.

Always Hungry: A Troll requires an upkeep cost. This upkeep represents the copious amounts of food that must be fed to the Troll in order to keep him loyal to the warband. The warband must pay 15 gold crowns after every game in order to keep the Troll. If the warband lacks the gold to pay the upkeep, the Boss has the option of sacrificing a Goblin Warrior or Cave Squig to the Troll in lieu of buying food (Trolls eat nearly anything). If this fee is not paid (either in gold or in warband members) the Troll gets hungry and wanders off in search of food.

Vomit Attack: Instead of his normal attacks, a Troll can regurgitate its highly corrosive digestive juices on an unfortunate hand-to-hand combat opponent. This is a single attack that automatically hits with a Strength of 5 and ignores armour saves.
Orc special equipment

Squig Prodder

15 gold crowns

Availability: Common (Goblins only)

This item is a long pole with a trio of spikes at the end. It is used by Goblin Squig herders to keep their livestock in line. Cave Squigs will recognize a Squig prodder and automatically give the bearer more respect, as they’ve all been on its pointy end more than once! To represent this, a Goblin with a Squig prodder can keep all Cave Squigs within 12” from going wild, instead of the normal 6” (see the Minderz special rule under the Cave Squig entry). In addition, a Squig prodder is treated exactly like a spear in hand-to-hand combat.

Mad Cap Mushrooms

25 gold crowns

Availability: Common (if warband includes Goblins)

Mad Cap Mushrooms (see the rules in the Mordheim rulebook for more information on Mad Cap Mushrooms) are a necessity for someone wishing to wield a ball and chain (see below). Fortunately for Orc warbands, Mad Cap Mushrooms are cultivated by the Night Goblins of the Worlds Edge Mountains, and they are much more willing to trade these to other Goblins. Though normally a rare item in Mordheim, Mad Cap Mushrooms are a common item that costs 25 gold crowns for an Orc warband that includes one or more Goblins.

Ball and Chain

15 gold crowns

Availability: Common (Goblins only)

This is a huge iron ball with a chain attached, used by the dreaded Night Goblin Fanatics to deal out whirling death. Enormously heavy, it can only be used when combined with Mad Cap Mushrooms.

SPECIAL RULES

Incredible Force: Because the ball and chain is so heavy, normal armour does very little to protect against it. No armour saves are allowed against wounds caused by a ball and chain. In addition, any hit from a ball and chain is very likely to take off someone’s head (or at least break some ribs!). Therefore, any hit that successfully wounds will do 1D3 wounds instead of 1.

Random: The only way to wield a ball and chain is to swing it around in large circles, using your body as a counter-weight. Unfortunately this is not a very controllable fighting style, and as soon as he starts swinging his ball and chain a warrior starts to lose control. The first turn he starts swinging the ball and chain, the model is moved 2D6” in a direction nominated by the controlling player. In his subsequent Movement phases, roll a D6 to determine what the model does:

</table>

1 The model trips and strangles himself with the chain. The model is taken out of action. When rolling for Injury after the game, a roll of 1-3 means the model is out permanently, instead of the normal 1-2.

2-5 The model moves 2D6” in a direction nominated by the controlling player.

If the ball and chain wielding model moves into contact with another model (friend or foe), he counts as charging into close combat, and will engage in close combat until his next movement phase. Opponents wishing to attack a ball and chain wielding model suffer a To Hit penalty of -1, as they must dodge the whirling ball to get close enough to strike. The ball and chain wielder cannot be held in close combat and will automatically move even if he starts the Movement phase in base contact with another model. If the model moves into contact with a building, wall, or other obstruction, he is automatically taken out of action. In addition, a ball and chain wielding Goblin is much too busy trying to control the spinning weapon to worry about what others are saying about him behind his back, so ignores the special rules for Animosity.

Cumbersome: Because the ball and chain is so heavy, a model equipped with one may carry no other weapons or equipment. In addition, only a model under the influence of Mad Cap Mushrooms has the strength to wield a ball and chain.

Unwieldy: The great weight of the ball and chain can easily tear ligaments or pull a wielder’s arms out of their sockets. While someone under the influence of Mad Cap Mushrooms will not notice such effects, when the drug wears off he will be in great pain. To represent this, at the end of the battle the controlling player must roll for Injury for each model that used a ball and chain, just as if the model had been taken out of action. If the model was actually taken out of action normally, just roll once for Injury – there is no need to make a second roll.
Orc special skills

Orc Heroes may use the following Skill list instead of any of the standard Skill lists available to them.

'ard ead

The warrior has a thick skull even for an Orc. He has a special +3+ save on a D6 to avoid being stunned. If the save is made, treat a stunned result as knocked down instead. If the Orc also wears a helmet, this save is 2+ instead of 3+ (this takes the place of the normal helmet special rule).

waaaggh!

Ores are aggressive creatures and some are experts at bulldozing charges. The warrior may add +D3" to his charge range.

'ere we go!

Ores often charge even the most fearsome opponents. The model may ignore Fear and Terror tests when charging.

Da cunnin' plan

Only the Boss may have this skill. The warband may re-roll any failed Rout tests as long as the Boss is not out of action.

Well 'ard

The Orc has a thick, dark-green skin, possibly indicating Black Orc blood. Such is the toughness of the Orc that he may add +1 to any armour saves.

'eadbasher

Orcs have massive physical strength and some of them even learn to aim their blows at the heads of their opponents, with obvious results. Any knocked down results which the Orc causes in hand-to-hand count as stunned results instead.

Waaaggh! Magic

Waaaggh! spells are used by Orc Shamans. They are rituals of a sort, howling prayers to the boisterous Orc gods Gork and Mork.

D6 Result

1 Led'z go.

The Shaman's howling invigorates the kids to fight even harder for Gork and Mork.

Any Orc or Goblin within 4" of the Shaman will automatically strike first in hand-to-hand combat regardless of other circumstances.

Difficulty: 9

2 Oil Gerroff!

A huge, green ectoplastic hand pushes an enemy away.

Range 8". Moves any enemy model within range D6" directly away from the Shaman. If the target collides with another model or a building, both suffer 1 S3 hit. Notes: very handy for dropping people from high buildings with. May not be cast on models in hand-to-hand combat.

Difficulty: 7

3 Zaap!

A crackling green bolt of WAAAGH! energy erupts from the Shaman’s forehead to strike the skull of the closest foe. This energy easily overloads the brain of a weak-willed opponent.

Range 12". Causes D3 S4 hits on the closest enemy target, with no armour saves allowed.

Difficulty: 9

4 Foulled Yah

The Shaman disappears in a green mist, confusing his enemies.

No enemy may charge the Shaman during their next turn. If the Shaman is engaged in hand-to-hand combat he may immediately move 4" away.

Difficulty: 6

5 Clubba.

A huge, green club appears in the band of the Shaman.

The ectoplastic club counts as a normal club with +2 Strength bonus and gives the Shaman +1 attack as well. This spell lasts until the Shaman suffers a wound.

Difficulty: 7

6 Fire of Gork.

Two bolts of green flame shoot from the Shaman’s nose to strike the nearest enemy model.

Range 12". Each of the two bolts causes D3 S3 hits; the bolts can either be fired both at the closest enemy target or split between the two closest enemy targets.

Difficulty: 8
Orc tactics

Crump 'em! The fierce nature of Orcs means that they are always ready for a good scrap. They would much rather kill and rob than search ruins looking for treasure. As such, they are an excellent warband for your Mordheim games. The following are things that should be kept in mind when designing and running your Orc warband:

Goblins and Cave Squigs are expendable. Orcs do not particularly care if these members of the warband die or run away, and they are relatively cheap. In addition, Cave Squigs can easily hold their own against most foes in close combat, as long as they have a Goblin minder close by to keep them in line. Use these troops as your front-line fighters. You can lose twice as many of them as normal before your warband is forced to take a Rout test, so don't be afraid to use them.

Trolls are scary. If you can afford to add a Troll to your warband, do so! The ability to cause fear should not be underestimated. However, even without considering this ability, a Troll is a nasty opponent. With multiple attacks, multiple wounds, and the ability to regenerate, a Troll is likely to stand and take lots of attacks from the opposing warband without missing a beat. In addition, its larger base size means that it can effectively block a large alleyway (or even a street!) all by itself.

The warband I have put together is designed around the use of Goblins and Cave Squigs as the front-line troops. The band is 13 models strong, so will have to lose 4 Orcs or 8 Goblins/Squigs (or something in-between) before a Rout test is required. The Orcs will mostly stand back and shoot with bows, only throwing themselves into the fray if it is absolutely necessary. As the warband collects more money, it can purchase more equipment and add more members. The warband could be expanded to include more Orcs, Goblins, and Cave Squigs, or the Boss could decide to save up enough until he can afford a hard-hitting (and very durable) Troll.
Reinhold walked among the buildings, hunting for more of the precious wyrdstone. The Reinland Captain was alone, as he had spread his warband throughout this quarter. They had stumbled upon an unusually large concentration of the stone shards, and were hoping to find and gather as much treasure as possible before any rivals got wind of their find.

Movement at the end of the street brought him out of his reverie. Three bandy green midgets dressed in black were prodding forward what looked like enormous orange balls with legs. 'Goblins', thought the mercenary to himself 'damn! but wasn't the figures in black that worried him. it was the creatures they were herding. As they came closer, Reinhold could see the enormous mouths that occupied most of the creatures' bodies. Cave Squigs, all teeth and bad temper, and three of them were more than a match for a single human, no matter how skilled. Just as he started to duck into the nearest doorway to avoid being spotted, one of the Goblins looked him straight in the eyes. The little creature's face split into an evil gap-toothed grin, and he prodded his Cave Squig forward more quickly. The other Goblins followed suit, and soon all of the creatures were running down the narrow street toward Reinhold, the Squigs bounding forward on powerful legs, and the Goblins running behind.

Grim determination set in his features as Reinhold resolved to sell his life dearly. The familiar weight of the buckler on his arm and his family sword in his hand reassured the scarred veteran somewhat, and he limbered up his sword arm with a few practice swings in anticipation of the coming conflict. The Goblins were closer now, little more than a block away. 'It's been a good life,' thought the old warrior proudly.

Suddenly one of the Goblins stumbled on a loose stone in the street, jostling one of his companions. The second creature hissed his displeasure at this mistreatment and swung his spear at his clumsy neighbour, narrowly missing him. Both Goblins had stopped now and faced each other in the street, spears at the ready, jabbering away at each other in their evil tongue. The third continued his run a few paces, but after noticing that his comrades were no longer keeping up, he stopped as well and swung around to see what all the commotion was about. The noise stopped the Cave Squigs, and as they turned, the large-toothed monsters began to whine in excitement. In the next moment all six creatures were involved in a swirling melee. As Reinhold watched one of the Goblins thrust his spear into the right arm of his mate, only to suffer a huge bite on his leg from a Cave Squig.

Experience told Reinhold that while such fights often broke out among the green skinned folk, they rarely proved to be fatal or long lasting. Deciding to take advantage of his good luck while it lasted, the mercenary ducked into the doorway he'd moved towards earlier. 'Praise Sigmar for bad tempers,' breathed the warrior under his breath as he made good his escape.
The Mordheim boxed game contains:

- 10 plastic Skaven
- 2 Range Rulers
- 8 plastic Mercenaries
- City Ruins
- 176 page Rulebook
- 6 Dice

Available now, the boxed game contains everything you need to start your warband and fight battles in Mordheim. There are two warbands and a whole host of card ruined buildings so that you can create the ruined streets of Mordheim. The comprehensive rulebook describes eight different warbands and a vast array of weapons and equipment. There are also rules for running ongoing Mordheim campaigns as well as including hired swords and special characters in your warband.

The Mordheim boxed game contains:
Not content with using the fantastic Mordheim Possessed models already available, Citadel Miniatures designer Aly Morrison decided to convert his own warband of the followers of Chaos. To show just how flexible the plastic sprues available in the Warhammer Regiments and Battle Squad boxed sets are, Aly has made the entire warband from these plastics.

Aly: I must admit that the main reason I wanted to convert my own Possessed warband was to show what could be achieved just by using plastic parts. With the introduction of the new Warhammer Regiment and Warhammer 40,000 Battle Squad sprues it has never been easier to convert models using only plastic. All you need is just one of each of the sprues to make the possibilities for conversions endless. Also, compared to buying individual metal components, plastic is a lot cheaper, making converting on a budget very easy indeed.

I find working with plastic very easy. Plastic is a lot softer than metal so it is simple to get the fit that you want, and the fact that it is also quite light means that you don’t need to pin everything in place - all you need to do is stick it where you want it. This gives you the freedom to experiment more as the bits are just as easy to take off as put on, making simple things like weapon and head swaps very easy to experiment with.

This conversion project gave me the perfect opportunity to really delve into the ideas and atmosphere of Mordheim. I also looked at the work of artists like Pieter Bruegel and Hieronymus Bosch, who were an influence during the conceptual stage of Mordheim.

With all these ideas swirling around in my head, I set about converting the warband.
I used the fantasy Orc body and legs because of their size. To merge the Boar’s head to the body I had to use quite a lot of Green Stuff, in fact overall I used the greatest amount of Green Stuff on this model. I also used some to build up the Vfa JOagistex. The components were mostly taken from the Zombie sprue although the upper half of his body is Skaven. I did this to bulk him out slightly, although because he is a magic user, I wanted him to look quite weak as most of his strength would derive from his magic. As you can see from the in-progress shot, the only real sculpting work done was the hood which I made from Green Stuff. The playing cards and scroll were made of paper dipped in PVA glue. I made the candles out of a piece of plastic rod with a Green Stuff flame. To give the warband a theme, I decided to give everyone a severed arm taken from the Zombie plastic sprue. Knowing when to stop is often the most important thing about converting as sometimes you can go too far. For the spikes on its back I used the ones from the Orc sprue, although I could have easily used cocktail sticks or simply carved them from a bit of spare plastic sprue.

I wanted the Mutants to have an attack advantage over their enemy. With this in mind I decided that one would have the extra arm mutation and the other one would have some tentacles. Both the models are based on the Zombie models, although the one with the extra arm has a Goblin body to make him look hunched over. When I was positioning the extra arm, I wanted it to be somewhere where it would clearly be of use, so where better than growing out of his head! If this wasn’t weird enough, I also gave the model a severed hand holding a fish sandwich. For the tentacles on the other model I again used Skaven tails.
I had actually finished the warband but just had to go back and convert some more models when I realised that I hadn’t used the Warhammer 40,000 Chaos spiky sprue. To make up for not using it on the rest of the warband I really went to town on these two. Looking at it you could quite easily use all the bits on this cool sprue. Both of these Henchmen are based upon the Chaos Warrior body and legs with Orc arms. For the first one I added the Ork Boyz shoulder pads with lots of the spiky bits from the spiky sprue. His head is one of the gargoyles from the spiky sprue used to adorn guns on Chaos tanks. To the back of the model I added all manner of chains and severed heads from different places.

As I wanted both these models to look well armoured, I added to the second the jaw guard from the Ork Boyz sprue. I used the severed head from the Zombie sprue as it looks quite startled. The shield is simply one of the armour plates from the spiky sprue. The last thing I did was add the severed arm to mark them as members of the Hands of Fate.

I was inspired by Hollywood to do this model as all warbands and gangs seem to have an oaf in their ranks. The size of this model is purely visual as all he is in game terms is a Brethren armed with a mace and shield. This figure was the simplest to make as he is just an Orc with a Zombie’s head. To make him look really bizarre I added a plate of apple cores to his back made out of a drawing pin and some apple cores nicked from Mark Jones. To make him look a real dunce, I added a candle to his head.

The Beastman
This was the hardest to convert as I had to work out exactly how to make him. I definitely wanted to use the plastic wolf head. To make the head look more like a Beastman, I carved a full set of teeth and then added the horns from the skeleton sprue. The body was quite difficult to convert as I wanted to give him hooved hind legs. To achieve this, I used the back legs of a boar added to the legs and body of an Orc. To the back of the figure I stuck all manner of stuff from the Mordheim accessory sprue and again sculpted a fish out of Green Stuff.

The Oaf
I was inspired by Hollywood to do this model as all warbands and gangs seem to have an oaf in their ranks. The size of this model is purely visual as all he is in game terms is a Brethren armed with a mace and shield. This figure was the simplest to make as he is just an Orc with a Zombie’s head. To make him look really bizarre I added a plate of apple cores to his back made out of a drawing pin and some apple cores nicked from Mark Jones. To make him look a real dunce, I added a candle to his head. I think this model is the simplest conversion in the warband, but one of the most effective.
The Brethren

I wanted the Brethren to look really hunched over. To achieve this I used a mixture of Zombie and Mordheim legs with Goblin torsos and arms. To make them look really depraved I used Zombie heads throughout. After all, wyrdstone can’t be good for your skin. The buckler from the Mordheim accessory sprue looks great as a helmet so I put one on all of the spear-armed Brethren. I was going to leave it at that but as a thought I tried adding a severed hand. It looked like a kind of twisted crest so I added one to all the helmets.

I wanted the Brethren armed with a bow to look really miserable (followers of Chaos are not noted for their skill with the bow so he probably hasn’t ever hit anyone.) To achieve this I again used the body and arms of a Goblin to make him look really hunched over. I put the rope piece around his neck with the bell from the Zombie sprue hanging from it. The most miserable head I could find was the severed one from the Zombie sprue.

Painting the warband

So that the colours wouldn’t take anything away from the conversions, I decided on a very simple colour scheme. For the most part I painted the clothes in greys and blacks with contrasting skin tones. The highlights were also kept to a minimum with some areas like the leather not highlighted at all but coated with gloss varnish. I painted the warband quite quickly so that it could be used in games straight away, but my eventual aim is to go back and add all manner of tattoos to the warband members’ skin to make them look even more Chaotic.

What Next?

My next project will be an Undead warband consisting of a lot of Zombies. I will probably use the same techniques I have talked about here, but who knows, I will probably have come up with a different way of converting by then. I think the most important thing is not to be frightened of experimenting and of course, never throw anything out. It’s always a good idea to see what other people are doing. One of the things I enjoy most at Games Day is when modellers and gamers come up to me with conversions they have done. I am always impressed by what other people think of. Remember that the possibilities for conversion are endless!
There are few sights as horrific as a Possessed warband. Deranged warriors smeared with blood and dirt wave jagged weapons and chant blasphemous rites as they throw themselves upon their enemies. The most unsettling of all are the Possessed themselves — twisted monsters made of the bodies of men, inhabited and warped by Daemons. Out this month is a new Magister to lead your cult as well as a terrifying Possessed and a deranged Darksoul.

RUINED BUILDINGS FOR THE CITY OF THE DAMNED
AVAILABLE NOW AUS$29.95 NZ$34.95
Colin Harvey's Witch Hunter warband explores a ruined building.

Colin: Way back in WD223 there appeared the first rules in progress for what became Mordheim, City of the Damned. As soon as I saw the Witch Hunters I knew I had to put together a warband of these devout servants of Sigmar. Their dark, sinister image blended with their religious belief in cleansing the world of the tainted really appealed to me. At the time, however, there were few figures available in the puritan style I wanted, which was a blend of crusaders, knights and the monastic orders. I therefore had to convert the majority of the models...

For the Warrior-Priest I sculpted more hair and added litany papers onto the Empire Grand Theogonist model. I also added a shield and icon device to his breastplate.

The models I used for the Witch Hunters were the Imperial Reiksguard Knights on foot. I used heads and hats from the Warhammer Quest Witch Hunter and the new Johann van Hal special character, leaving enough of the Reiksguard helmet to create the mask and collar. With a few weapon swaps and converted shields, the look I wanted was achieved. The hardest part of the conversions was sculpting on the Witch Hunters' hair to cover up the previous details.
The Monks (these models can easily be used as Zealots under the new rules) were made from Bretonnian Squires, with heads filed and re-modelled for the monk style haircut. To these I added necklaces and amulets bearing the same cross symbol that runs throughout the warband.

I converted the Flagellant by adding pieces from the Zombie sprue, which gave him relics and trophies so that he looks more like a prophet of doom.

My Pit Fighter Hired Sword. The body is from the Warhammer Quest Pit Fighter model and the head is from a Catachan Jungle Fighter.

Ye exquisite warband of talented artisan Colin Harvey.
The taverns in the settlements around Mordheim make good recruitment centres for warriors to sell their services to the highest bidder. Here, Mark Havener describes two more Hired Swords that can be recruited by your warband.

Imperial Assassin

40 gold crowns to hire + 20 gold crowns upkeep

Politics is a dangerous game and not all dangers are found on the battlefield. The Assassin specializes in removing 'obstacles' with discretion. He will hire himself out to the highest bidder and satisfaction is guaranteed. The Assassin calmly dispatches his rather distasteful duties with fastidiousness and finesse. In between jobs, such a man will often join a wandering warband in order to hone his skills; assassination is not a profession for the slow or dull-witted!

May Be Hired: Any warband except Witch Hunters, Sisters of Sigmar or Skaven may hire the Assassin.

Rating: An Imperial Assassin increases the warband’s rating by +22 points, plus 1 point for each experience point he has.

Weapons/Armour: Sword, dagger, throwing daggers and a crossbow pistol.

SPECIAL RULES

Weapons Master: The Assassin is a master of weapons and may use any weapon he finds. You may purchase weapons for the Assassin just as you would for any other member of your warband. However, unlike other members of your warband, any weapon you give an Assassin is his to keep – he will not give it to another warband member later. In addition, although he knows how to use them, an Assassin will never use a blackpowder weapon as such devices are far too conspicuous in their use for someone in his profession.

Poisoner: Assassins specialize in the use of poisons. The Assassin starts each game with his weapons poisoned with either Black Lotus or Dark Venom. The controlling player decides which poison the Assassin is armed with before the game starts, and this poison does not need to be traded for. And no, the Assassin cannot poison other warband members’ weapons, nor will he loan his out!

Skills: An Assassin may choose from Combat, Speed, Shooting skills or Unstoppable Charge from the Strength skills list when he gains a new skill. He may also choose from the special Assassin skills below.

ASSASSIN SKILLS

Backstabber: The Assassin specializes in attacking his targets when their back is turned. The Assassin may charge an opponent he cannot see (he knows you’re there!) as long as the target model is within his charge reach. If he does this, he surprises his opponent and receives a +1 to hit him with all attacks and any rolls on the Serious Injuries chart are at +1. This bonus lasts for the first round of combat only, as his opponent will swiftly recover his wits if he survives the initial assault.

Hide in Shadows: The Assassin can blend into the shadows so that his opponents will not see him. As long as he is within 1" of a wall or other linear obstacle (hedge, fence, well, etc.), opposing models must pass an Initiative test in order to charge or shoot at him.
Tilean Marksman

30 gold crowns to hire + 15 gold crowns upkeep

The Empire is not the only place that breeds mercenaries. The constant warring among the city-states of Tilea provides many opportunities for a man who knows how to use a weapon. Still, sometimes the fighting dies down in Tilea and many of these mercenaries are forced to seek employment in other lands. Many of these temporarily unemployed mercenaries have heard of the trouble brewing in Mordheim and have come seeking a new patron.

May Be Hired: Any warband except Skaven, Ores or Undead may hire the Tilean Marksman.

Rating: A Tilean Marksman increases the warband's rating by +16 points, plus 1 point for each experience point he has.

The Perry twins, Michael and Alan, were responsible for designing the fantastic human Mercenary sprue. When the sprue first became available Michael was inspired to convert his own warband with a Kislevite look, using the existing Mordheim models.

Michael: As soon as I saw the plastic Mercenary sprue that Alan and I had sculpted, I decided to collect a warband for Mordheim. The only problem was that I didn’t want a straightforward warband, they needed to have a certain slant. By pure coincidence, the plastics came in the same day a Polish friend sent me a brilliant photographic book on the making of a Polish historical film. It was packed with ideas that corresponded well with Kislev. So there I had it, a Kislev warband. In games I would use the Middenheimer warband list, as their special rule of extra Strength for Heroes would be in character with men brought up in the harsh climate of Kislev.

The Mercenary Captain Michal Kurcz
As you can see he is based on the Reikland Captain with just a few alterations. I added a plastic fur cloak from the Middenheimer accessory sprue. I sculpted a leopard head on the cloak to denote his high rank. The original wide brimmed hat was snipped off and replaced with a blob of modelling putty and stippled to represent fur. On top of this I added a cloth bag (made from green stuff) and to finish it off, a couple of feathers from the plastic Soldiers of the Empire sprue were pushed into the putty while it was still wet. I removed his goatee beard as I wanted to give the whole warband an eastern European appearance with droopy moustaches.

The Champion Artur Jasinski
I thought this Champion would look great with a double-handed sword. The head was taken from the plastic Mordheim sprue, although I could have used any head without a beard, as this model would be wearing a big furry hat. The head was turned to face the direction of the sword blade which generally looks better. I also added a single-handed sword with a buckler over the cross guard, as a secondary armament.

The plastic fur cloak was increased in size using green stuff to cover the shoulders. The hat was modelled as before and I added a moustache. I enhanced the base by adding paving stones and a plastic skull.

The figure, as with all of them, was undercoated black and given generally three highlights of paint in each area, getting lighter with each successive coat. I wanted to give most of the warband a subdued look, just picking out the metal highlights so that the Captain really stuck out as the best figure. I painted some of the gang to look unshaven, which helps give them an air of menace.

The rest of the warband
The rest of the warband were all made using the Human Mercenary sprue and the Middenheimer accessory sprue, with simple additions.

For the Henchmen without hats on I scraped off two plastic heads and added scalp locks in the style of Cossacks or Tartars. This seemed apt for these poorer members of the warband. For the torsos I used the Mordheim body with the coat on and added a fur trim.

using the lenheimer

I scraped ip locks it is seemed s of the Mordheim a fur trim using Green stuff. The spear was added by drilling a hole through the hand. Then I cut the lantern from the Mordheim accessory sprue off its pole and stuck it on.

The two Henchmen carrying the chest was an experiment to see what could be achieved with the Mordheim plastic sprue. The arms and hands proved the trickiest to convert. All the parts except for the skull and rat were taken from the Mordheim sprue.

On small projects like a Mordheim warband it’s always worth spending a bit of time on the bases, this helps a great deal in bringing the figures to life. Plastic bits from the Zombie or Skeleton sprue are ideal. Masonry, paving stones and arrows stuck in at angles all look good.

You can easily individualise your own warband with simple conversion work, just look at historical books or films and take one or two simple elements from them, eg. a gang from Copher, the Arab's capital, could be made by adding turbans and cloaks.

Gluing Zombie or Skeleton heads and arms onto Mordheim bodies produces a great Undead gang. The key is just to experiment!

Stage 1: The basic model is assembled using parts from the Mordheim Mercenary plastic sprue and the cloak from the Middenheimer accessory sprue.

Stage 2: Using green stuff the cloak is built up around the shoulders. The hat is also modelled on and a feather from the Empire Halberdier sprue is added. A moustache is also added using a rolled out piece of green stuff.

Stage 3: Extra detail is added when the model is painted. Michael has used dark ruddy colours for the furs and painted on stubble to the model’s face.

A vast High Elf Army has sacked the tombs of Khemri before fleeing for the far reaches of Ulthuan. The purpose of their quest was to steal the great "Eye of Osiris", an ancient oracle that holds the key to crossing the gateways between the realms of the living and the dead. With this oracle the High Elves hope to discovery the spells of unbinding and destroy the Undead once and for all.

Settra, foremost among the Tomb Kings, has dispatched armies to hunt down those who have desecrated the sacred places of his realm and destroy them utterly.

Once WARMASTER is released loads of our stores will be running some fantastic scenarios encompassing an epic tale. Why don't you head down to your local Games Workshop store and join in?

A column of Khemrian Undead march from their tombs to bring death to those who dare oppose them.
Once again an Undead cross running waters of the Upper Reik, marching across the plains south of Nuln. Farmlands and small villages are crushed before the horde and the refugees rush north before the army! Someone must decimate this evil scourge before it is too late!!

Trapped between the imposing cliffs of Sartosa and the last approaching Undead fleet, the High Elves must form a battleline as best they can. The last survivors of a titanic sea battle, they have no hope of rescue. Come put up a valiant High Elf defense or crush them utterly in Settra's name.

The cold breeze swirled around the cursed earth where the High Elves camped. The once proud Lord Allyrion Caradryel has been forced to retreat his forces into the unforgiving mountains. Amidst the constant howling of the wind and bitter taste of sand fear finally grips the weary defenders as they prepare for their last stand. The end is near. In the distance a storm is coming and in the still of the night the dead are walking.

Fleeing the lands of Khemri with a piece of the Eye of Osiris, the High Elves are ambushed in the dead of night by huge Undead horde led by Morthael, the once trusted advisor of the Elf General Aethos. The sentries have quickly succumbed to the mighty horde and now Aethos must battle through the horde and make it to the waiting fleet for the final victory...

A bloody conflict will follow as their forces lay siege to the Tomb King's walking dead. Flaming skulls hurtle from the city walls. Chariots and cavalry clash on the open plains.

GET DOWN TO YOUR LOCAL GW STORE TODAY!
The warpstorms that had isolated the tropical world of Laniena III were at an end. Vital supplies for the garrison stationed there were now able to reach the planet after five years of isolation. Accompanying the convoy was an Ecclesiarchal mission from the Convent Sanctorum, consisting of both Orders Hospitalier and Militant. Ironically, this mission of mercy would be the very act that would spell doom for the citizens of Laniena III. Predatory Dark Eldar scout craft had ghosted the convoy to its destination. The first wave of Dark Eldar pirates attacked mere hours after the Imperial transports had landed.

What followed could best be described as four weeks of Hell & Damnation. Distress calls were made, and at the eleventh hour the astropaths received an answer from an Astartes strike craft patrolling the sector.

The last stand of the beleaguered defenders was at a place called Placidus Stagnum, an ancient and once beautiful city. Now murderous intentions were about to make it an open grave.

As the twilight darkened, the engines of Dark Eldar transports could be heard in the distance. The last of the brave defenders made their peace with the Emperor. As the grim ceremony came to a close the first wave of Space Marine drop-pods, as though delivered by His Immortal Will, screamed through the atmosphere.

LANIENA III pits the staunch forces of the Imperium (Imperial Guard, Sisters of Battle and Space Marines) against the evil Dark Eldar, all fought over a massive, fully sculpted gaming table, the likes of which you have never seen before (it really is that dramatic)!

LANIENA III will crash through these stores soon:

Andrew Long, manager of our Melbourne store, collects too many armies! He may be able to roll out any number of "war stories" as proof of his gaming knowledge; then there’s the two Golden Demon trophies that help back up claims of being an avid hobbyist; but let’s face it, the sheer size of his 40K armies stamp him as a collector.

Some of you may remember his Eldar Army from White Dwarf, there’s a huge Blood Angel collection (over 7,000 pts) that sometimes lives in the window of the Melbourne store, a sizeable Nurgle Cult force, Legion of the Damned, Necrons, a growing Orky Warband and those dead sexy Sisters of Battle that have influenced a load of people to start Sisters forces (just ask Head of Retail Jim Fox)... yep that’s too many armies.

So it was surprising when we asked Andrew to supply us with an army to showcase in White Dwarf that he offered up a Warhammer army.

"I love to play Fantasy Battle. I’ve played it longer than 40K and it’s always fun to play a good game of Fantasy. The Warhammer World and the armies that populate it have so much character and background. That’s something you can emphasise when you collect an army. Choosing troop types that influence the way the army plays during a game. Also, when you get down to painting the army, a strong theme really helps make it look good on the battlefield.

I collect the true children of Chaos, creatures that may have once been human but are now a powerful force in their own right... the Beastmen. The range of models available for a Beastmen army are excellent, with loads of character and they’re great to paint."

Andrew’s Beastmen army is built around the tactics of hitting the enemy head-on with a two prong attack.

"Whenever I put together an army my first choice is a large unit of Bestigor to spearhead my assault. With halberds, heavy armour and two wounds they are among the best shock troops in the Warhammer World. This unit forms to bodyguard for my Beastlord. They are supported by Ungor to harry the flanks and Chaos Hounds to chase down fleeing opposition units.

The second pincer is dominated by my Minatour. This rock hard unit is an imposing centre piece for the second arm and is supported by my Gor and Chariots."
The basis of these Beastmen tactics is to make up for the army's weakness. Like all Chaos armies the Beastmen have no missile troops. However, with their great toughness and two wounds I like to get my force moving. Everything marches head long across the battlefield to engage the enemy as quickly as possible. Those missile dependant armies have a lot of targets or run the risk of one of my two prongs reaching their main lines.

Once they hit each prong becomes a rolling wave of beastmen crashing against the opposing army. If all goes to plan enemy units that flee will be chased down by my fast moving units, the minotaurs and Chaos Hounds. Leaving the Bestigors and Gors to mop up.

The only other variation Andrew makes to the army is to sometimes add in a unit of Harpies.

"They're great for dropping in front of war machines or better still right in the middle of Goblin armies. Matt Davey, manager of our Parramatta store, certainly knows how ugly it can be when all those Night Goblin Fanatics come out to chew up more of their own army than the Harpies!"

Andrew's always been a fan of these massive Minotaurs, and it shows in this awesome unit!

HAMMERS OF ULRIC COMING SOON! A BRAND NEW NOVEL BY DAN ABNETT
Warhammer Chronicles takes a look at the Warhammer game, its rules, background and game mechanics, frequently stolen from in-progress developments here at the Studio. It also acts as a forum for dedicated Warhammer players who have produced inspired, well thought out and exciting additions to the game.

If you have got a good item for Warhammer Chronicles then write to:
Tuomas Pirinen (Warhammer Chronicles)
Games Workshop
Willow Road. Lenton
Nottingham, NG7 2WS

Please note that any letters containing rules queries, requests for a Mercedes Benz or cooking recipes etc. will be terminated with Extreme Prejudice. You have been warned.

This month we deal with some optional rules which you might like to try out in your Warhammer games, just for fun. The idea behind these rules is to represent some of the problems of commanding a real army which are not usually taken into account in a wargame. Obviously it hardly needs to be said that you and your opponent in the game should agree whether or not to use these rules and if you do, be prepared to use your imagination in applying them.

The Night Before The Battle

By Nigel Stillman

How much control does the General have over the course of events once the battle has begun? Not much. When the regiments start to move, the dust rises, the smoke of the guns obscures the view, confusing and contradictory reports come rushing in and couriers fail to deliver their vital messages. Orders are misunderstood or ignored, the most reliable subordinates have already fallen, the least reliable don’t do what is expected of them, the plan goes astray, the enemy do the unexpected and so it goes on. What is the General to do except put himself at the head of his reserves and charge in at the decisive moment to swing the balance, showing his banner surging forward, inspiring his flagging troops by heroic example, hurling back the enemy breakthrough? He might send out couriers to change orders or prompt his subordinates into action, but the results are uncertain and there will be inevitable, fateful delays.

The truth is that when the cannons begin to roar, the greater part of the General’s work is already done and the outcome is down to fate and fortune. This being so, the plans and preparations made by the General in the days before the battle, his choice of troops, the route of march, the choice of ground, the choice of subordinates, inspiring the troops and many other factors, influence the outcome of the battle greatly. Herein lies the greater part of the General’s work and where his talents, or lack of them, will seal the fate of his army. His decisions and judgements on the eve of battle will often be as decisive as anything he does on the day – maybe more so. A General who is fortunate to be able to direct the course of battle, rather than merely react to events, is most likely to be one who has made his plans well and taken everything into account before swords are even drawn.

This aspect of generalship is of course the last thing to be considered in the average wargame. Campaigns and scenarios try to deal with these things and confront the player with some of the real challenges of command. The wargame, however, places the player in a fortunate position of control which a real General could not hope to enjoy. The wargame is not wrong to do this, because a game which makes everything variable and out of the players’ control is no more realistic and much less interesting. What is needed are mechanisms for representing the aspects of generalship which are not usually taken into account.

The mechanism described here operates before the battle begins. It represents the General’s judgements on the days leading up to the battle and on the eve of battle itself. The choices made by the player as General create opportunities and circumstances which can give his army advantages in the battle. Of course, the opposing General will be doing the same, but his judgements will be different.
The heralds brought a list of the Dukes and Barons who had attended the King's muster. Some he knew of old, other names were new; sons who had inherited their fathers' domains. The King knew little of their worth. That night, he summoned them to his tent. There was heated debate in the council of war. Young Baron de Foppe, who happened to command the biggest retinue, was clearly an inexperienced fool, but Baron le Bon, a brilliant knight, had a greatly diminished following, having recently returned from an arduous quest. Baron de Foppe was demanding the place of honour on the right of the battle line. The expression on the face of Baron le Bon said it all.

The King spoke: "Baron de Foppe, it is my wish that you command on the left of the line, for although your rank and nobility entitle you to command on the right, the danger to the left of the army is so great, being exposed as it is to attack from the flank, that this place must be taken by the greatest contingent." Delighted with this flattery, Baron de Foppe concurred. Then turning to Baron le Bon, the King said: "Baron le Bon, my oldest and most trusted friend, since Baron de Foppe cannot be spared for the right flank, I choose you to command here, where your experience will outweigh your lack of troops." Baron le Bon smiled, knowing full well the mind and wisdom of the King.

Before the Battle

It is the evening before the battle. The sun is setting. The enemy are near and battle is expected tomorrow. All the reports you are going to get have already come in from the scouts and spies. The troops are resting in camp and eating what for many of them may be their last meal. There is only time to do one more thing before daybreak, when all efforts must be directed at getting the army up and moving. In this last quiet moment, the General, that is you, must opt to do one of the following things: Choose one from the following list.

- Consult the omens
- Equipment inspection
- Call a council of war
- Fraternise with the troops
- Study the maps
- Survey the battlefield
- Inspired oration
- The last supper
- The command will have chosen you as General. Any unit led by the General will not be affected by the highest points cost. Do not roll for your General. Any unit led by the General will not be affected by their original leader's personality.

Leader’s Personalities

The next thing you must do is to establish the personalities of your subordinate commanders. These include all your character models and all the other leaders of units (remember every unit has a leader even if it doesn’t have a Champion). In the case of units with multiple characters, only roll for one with the highest points cost. Do not roll for your General. Any unit led by the General will not be affected by their original leader’s personality.

One of the principle tasks of high command is to know the abilities of your subordinates and, if possible, to appoint the right men as leaders of units. Even though the General will usually not be able to change unit leaders (because they are tribal chiefs or feudal barons for example, who can’t be easily removed and replaced), he can take into account their personalities when making his plans. So, for example, it would be best to deploy a well led unit in an important position in the line of battle.

All armies must roll to determine each leader’s personality on the chart below. However if you call a council of war this will effect the results (see over the page).

Leader’s Personality Table (2D6)

2 Rash and Impetuous
A unit led by this leader will charge counter as a charge against enemy charging from the front (the unit moves 4" towards the enemy, and the enemy charges normally, both units count as charging; models attack in initiative order). Test against Leadership when enemies come within 8" of the unit. A failed test means the unit charges them.

3-4 Treacherous
This leader secretly harbours some kind of grudge or is jealous of your position as General. He would quite like to see you defeated and maybe even overthrown. A unit led by this leader will not charge the enemy and will never move at more than half rate (this includes marching).

5 Cautious
A unit led by this leader will not charge enemies more than 12" away from it. If occupying cover, the unit must test against Leadership to move out.

6-8 Decisive, Intelligent, and Uses Initiative
A unit led by this leader operates exactly as you, the General, would wish. The leader has understood what is in your mind and knows what to do.

9 Unreliable
A unit led by this leader will not rally when fleeing, he will just assume the battle is lost and head for home. When pursuing, the unit will rush off in search of plunder far behind the enemy battle line, so roll an extra D6 for pursuit.

10 Incompetent
A unit led by this leader is poorly trained and its equipment is neglected. Discipline is lax and morale is low. The leader doesn’t bother to inspect the troops or drill them regularly. Their pay is owing and their rations are meagre because he keeps most of the money for himself. The unit suffers -1 Leadership, -1 WS and -1 BS.

11-12 Expert Veteran
This renowned leader has the devotion of his men. A unit led by him operates exactly as you would wish. Even better than this, the unit may re-roll any failed Break test or Rally test. The unit is so well trained that they count as having +1 WS.
Call a Council of War

You summon all the regimental commanders to your tent for a council of war. You tell them the battle plan and ask their opinions. Each one has his say while you sit quietly watching. It is possible that someone will have a good idea to improve the plan or notices a fault. Who knows what else might be revealed at the council? Take note of who is confident, who may prove unreliable and who was too drunk to attend.

Advantage: If you call a council of war, you find out the strengths and weaknesses of your regimental leaders and their ability to act according to plan. You can deploy them where you think they will be most useful (or do least mischief) in the coming battle. When you roll for each leader to determine his personality before the battle begins, you may re-roll any undesirable results once per leader, to represent promoting a replacement for an incompetent one! You may then swap around the results you have rolled to apply to the leaders of your choice, to represent you appointing your most trusted lieutenants to lead the most important regiments (in game terms you only swap personalities not models).

If you do not call a council of war, your regiments will deploy for battle with whoever happens to be their leaders. Roll to establish personalities exactly as described on the previous page.

Equipment Inspection

You decide to check over the baggage and inspect the equipment, especially war machines, artillery, gunpowder or siege devices. If something is amiss, you instantly order men to put it right. If anything has been neglected, you will discover it before battle.

Advantage: One missile unit or battery gains +1 BS or may re-roll any misfire result in the coming battle because you ordered them to spend the night looking after their equipment.

Disadvantage: One random character must be made an example of and demoted to the ranks for neglecting his duties and so will not take part in the battle. He remains under guard in the baggage camp.

Consult the Omens

Everything that is within your power has been done, but there is much that is beyond your control. Maybe you should consult the gods for guidance. As the sun sets, you summon the priests to scrutinise the omens.

Who can predict the will of the gods? roll a D6 on the chart below.

D6 Result

1-2: The omens are dismal; tomorrow is not an auspicious day to fight a battle and the portents indicate defeat. Unfortunately, you have no choice when to fight, because the enemy are already at hand. Though you may be sceptical of superstition, your troops are not. As the rumour spreads, they are filled with a sense of dread. In the coming battle, all troops will roll three dice to rally and choose the worst two scores.

3-6: The omens are favourable; tomorrow is an auspicious day to fight and there are portents of victory! The news spreads through the army filling the troops with confidence and banishing their fears. In the coming battle you may re-roll any failed Panic tests and Fear tests.

Sacrifice to the Gods

It is wise to placate the gods before going into battle. This is both prudent and respectful. It is best to get the gods on your side and it is certainly tempting fate to ignore them. Therefore, you summon the priests and perform a sacrifice. You call upon the gods for divine intervention and vow to offer up to them the captives and the lion’s share of the booty if they grant you the victory.

The gods are fickle: Roll a D6.

D6 Result

1: The sacrifice was not acceptable. The gods are offended! Not only do they ignore your pleas for help, but seek your doom. Whenever the General suffers a wound in the coming battle, roll a D6. On a roll of a 1, this is a mortal wound and the General is slain, regardless of any remaining wounds.

2-6: The gods are impressed. In the coming battle you may re-roll one failed test against the General’s Leadership during the battle.

Study the Maps

You spread out all the maps in your tent and discuss the routes of approach to the battlefield, trying to guess where the armies will meet. You ask the opinion of your scouts and interrogate some locals which they have rounded up. This diligent scrutiny reveals possibilities for you to exploit with your army.

Advantage: You discover a way to outflank the enemy position and order one unit of troops to approach the battlefield by this route. One unit of your choice may arrive anywhere on either side edge of the table at the start of any of your turns, then moves normally.

Disadvantage: The maps may have been inaccurate and the locals may have given misleading information. The troops you despatch by the roundabout route may lose their way. Roll a dice on the turn you want them to arrive. On a score of 1 or 2 they do not arrive. You may dice again in subsequent turns. If they fail to arrive for three turns, they don’t turn up at all.
The Last Supper

Many of your men will not outlive the next day. Why not cheer them up by issuing double rations so they can have a feast. Your generous gesture will make them all the more loyal and confident. If any of those boring quartermasters say that the rations will be expended, tell them that tomorrow night your victorious army will be feasting on the victuals of the enemy! This is greeted with loud cheers.

Advantage: The troops awake the next morning feeling well and confident. All troops (not characters, as they eat well anyway) count +1 to hit in hand-to-hand combat.

Disadvantage: The troops are slow to get ready for battle after feasting and drinking late into the night.

Inspired Oration

The great generals of the past always made a heroic and inspiring speech to the troops just before the battle, or so it is said. Therefore you should be no exception, destined as you are for greatness. Scribes will record your speech for posterity and the troops will be inspired to follow you. You summon a supply of candles and parchment, stay up late into the night composing your speech and learning it off by heart.

Advantage: The General makes the speech at the start of the battle before his assembled troops. The speech is indeed heroic and inspiring. When it is finished, the troops raise a loud cheer and bang their weapons against their shields. The range of the General's Leadership bonus is now doubled from 12" to 24" for the entire battle.

Disadvantage: The General hurries many candles composing what turned out to be a short, but effective speech. Now he is tired and not very alert. He suffers -1 WS, -1 BS and -1 Initiative throughout the battle.

Survey the Battlefield

You decide to use the last remaining rays of the setting sun to look over the ground between your army and the enemy, so as to choose the best place to deploy for battle. The long shadows reveal the lie of the land and suggest possibilities.

Advantage: You notice a strategically important terrain feature and give orders for light troops to occupy it at once so as to be in place when the battle begins. In the coming battle, you may deploy one unit and any associated Champions plus one independent character anywhere on the battlefield, excepting the enemy deployment zone, before any other deployment.

Disadvantage: Enemy scouts spot you and take shots in the dark. Your unit with the highest Leadership accompanies you on this task as your bodyguard (if more than one unit is eligible, determine which one by rolling a dice). Now you must roll a dice for each trooper. On a score of 1 he was shot and will not be taking part in the battle. Roll also for yourself and on a score of 1, you begin the battle having already suffered one wound.

Fraternise with the Troops

You wander round the camp disguised as a common soldier, laughing, joking and playing dice with your troops. Everybody knows who you are but pretend not to recognise you; flattered as they are to be able to talk openly with the General himself. You say a few words of encouragement to the young recruits, listen to much grumbling about rations, pay and long marches and maybe hear words of wisdom from veterans.

Advantage: Word gets around the camp. Your men now know that you care about them and share their concerns. They will follow you with devotion and will fight with determination in the coming battle. All regiments may re-roll any tests to rally.

Disadvantage: You lose a game of dice with the biggest and best of the veterans. You must show good humour and lose an item of your wargear.

IMPERIAL GUARD BATTLE FORCE — AUS$125 NZ$145
The Colonel stepped up to trooper Marbo. Marbo’s eyes were empty again, like they always were when he wasn’t stalking through the jungle or carving his name in some enemy’s internal organs.

Inwardly the Colonel sighed — there was something wrong with this boy. Blood and death had warped him to the point where he could only be normal with a blade in his hand.

Once again the Colonel pronounced the well-rehearsed words, “For valour in battle and service to the Emperor of unbounded courage you are hereby awarded the Star of Terra bear it with pride and may you inspire others to worthy endeavour in the service of Man.”

The Colonel completed the dedication in a single breath before pinning the ribbon onto Marbo’s chest.

This one was for wiping out a whole squad of aliens, killing their commander and destroying their command post single-handed.

He leaned closer to Marbo and asked, “You want me to look after it for you son? Like the rest?”

Marbo nodded solemnly.

“Alright son, you can go.” The words had barely left the Colonel’s lips before Sly Marbo had plunged back into the jungle as smoothly as a fish slipping into a stream.

Sly Marbo ambushes a squad of Eldar Rangers.

hundred years ago the High Elf boat of Lord Valoriel set sail across the ocean to Khemri. Some say that he sought the ancient wealth buried amongst the tombs of that land, others that he merely sought to escape from the dull routine of courtly life. Upon landing, he marched across the wasteland to a long abandoned city on the edge of the desert. His guides had warned him before they deserted that no one had dared trespass the ruins since their fall a thousand years ago. The Elven Lord sneered at such superstition. He was eager to recover the great treasure which he believed the ruins held. But he would not lay claim to its prize unchallenged. The old king of the city was long dead but he still ruled this land, destined to an eternal living death by the curse of Nagash. He had but one desire deep in his shrivelled heart, his ancestors. From their graves, his warriors stirred. Hundreds of Skeletons rose to face the might of the High Elves, willed into action by the power of the Tomb King and his ancestors. From their graves, his warriors stirred. From their graves, his warriors stirred. From their graves, his warriors stirred. The battle would be bitter and bloody.

When Lord Valoriel, the High Elf commander, scanned the map, he realised that the Undead army had a stronger right flank and his army was too weak to take on that side. He decided to attack the Undead army’s left flank. He placed a unit of Elven archers on each side of his army, ranks of valiant Elven spearmen on each side of him, their flanks protected by units of archers. On his left flank he had placed a column of Reavers, swift at dealing death with their bows, and resplendent Silver Helms to protect the repeater bolt throwers at the head of the column, ably commanded by Aeradhae the mage who, as always in the calm before the storm, was deep in meditation. Beyond the wizard was a unit of Elven archers intent on securing the woods that guarded the entrance to the ruined town. On his right flank were the chariots where rode the bravest of his warriors, whose valour had won them the right to bear the magical Battle Banner which had accompanied Valoriel’s kin into battle for centuries. Nearby was the heroic Naramiel, Lord of Castle Sarn. Valoriel looked up at the clouds. His heart was gladdened by the sight of the giant eagles of Annulii, kings of the sky. So they had come as promised. Belching flame towards the lines of Undead was Arrach, the Dragon ridden by Prince Falunieras in his silver armour. The great serpent eyed the blasphemous form of the Undead Zombie Dragon with hatred. The Elven general turned to his messengers. “Go, my fleet-footed children, inform our lords that battle shall commence. He nodded at lymfre, his second in command, whose white horse pranced nervously at the stench coming from the ranks of the dead. “Now we shall win ourselves glory.”

Another large brigade of Skeletons armed with spears and bows guarded the Undead right flank. To outflank that brigade meant entering the precarious ruins of the ancient town. Their battle line was well guarded. The enemy general was no fool. Valoriel could see him in his chariot of bone, a mere husk wrapped in decaying robes, his golden crown and the glowing orb which be clutch in his withered hand. Dotted evenly along the length of the Undead lines were the Tomb King’s personal servants, the Liche Priests, gnarled masters of the art of necromancy, who would help control his shambling army.

Valoriel smiled contemptuously. This sorry gathering of the grave was no match for his warriors. The general stood in his chariot at his army’s centre where be had concentrated the main thrust of his army, ranks of valiant Elven spearmen each side of him, their flanks protected by units of archers. On his left flank he had placed a column of Reavers, swift at dealing death with their bows, and resplendent Silver Helms to protect the repeater bolt throwers at the head of the column, ably commanded by Aeradhae the mage who, as always in the calm before the storm, was deep in meditation. Beyond the wizard was a unit of Elven archers intent on securing the woods that guarded the entrance to the ruined town. On his right flank were the chariots where rode the bravest of his warriors, whose valour had won them the right to bear the magical Battle Banner which had accompanied Valoriel’s kin into battle for centuries. Nearby was the heroic Naramiel, Lord of Castle Sarn. Valoriel looked up at the clouds. His heart was gladdened by the sight of the giant eagles of Annulii, kings of the sky. So they had come as promised. Belching flame towards the lines of Undead was Arrach, the Dragon ridden by Prince Falunieras in his silver armour. The great serpent eyed the blasphemous form of the Undead Zombie Dragon with hatred. The Elven general turned to his messengers. “Go, my fleet-footed children, inform our lords that battle shall commence. He nodded at lymfre, his second in command, whose white horse pranced nervously at the stench coming from the ranks of the dead. “Now we shall win ourselves glory.”

A Warmaster battle report by Dylan Owen, Alessio Cavatore & Rick Priestley

The inaugural Warmaster battle report is a bit special. You see we’ve managed to coax/threaten/beg the creator of Warmaster, Rick Priestley, into taking part! So, sit back and read how Rick’s valiant High Elves get on against the foul Undead commanded by Alessio.
The compulsory element to the 2,000 point High Elf army is four units of Spearmen, two units of Archers and the General himself. In a fairly large army such as this, I prefer a bit more missile support and so have added a further two units of Archers and a unit of bolt throwers. Against most opponents, it is possible to deploy the Elven missile units broadly, or to scatter them about, as their extra-ordinary accuracy enables them to score sufficient hits to drive enemy units back and throw them into confusion. However, against Undead this would be a waste (Undead are unaffected by the Confusion rules) so my plan was to concentrate fire and destroy units where possible.

A Wizard and two Heroes fulfil my command needs perfectly. The Heroes will command the wings of the army whilst the General looks after the centre and the Wizard takes care of the special effects.

To bolster the aggressive element of the army, I added a Dragon Rider. This is a troop type unique to the High Elves and so one I thought well worth including in the battle. This absorbs a lot of my points, but with 6 attacks and 6 hits as well as the ability to breath fire and fly, the 350 points asking price doesn’t seem unreasonable.

A unit of Giant Eagles gives the army some mobility and will prove useful for picking off any artillery that the enemy care to deploy. Flying troops are best thought of as squadrons of aircraft in so far as you send them off to perform a mission after which they ‘home back’ for new orders. Although they can use their initiative to attack close targets, flyers can’t be given orders by a character once they are airborne – in the rules that means more than 20cm away.

Add a unit of Reavers to give some mobile fire support to the cavalry, and all I’ve got points left for is the odd magic item and another unit of Spearmen. I’m not completely happy about the Spearmen as a choice, but there are just too few points for anything else. At least I can use them to make a solid line of infantry.

Magic: I decided to use the magic to support my attacking troops with the Battle Banner for the chariots (50 points), Sword of Might (10 points) for one of the units of Silverhelms, and the Wizard gets the Ring of Magic (30 points). This last item gives one automatic spell cast. With just the one Wizard, I decided to emphasise attack over defence in the knowledge that High Elf Wizards can be very dangerous indeed. Not only do they have some very effective spells, but they automatically re-roll a failed cast and are therefore more predictable than ordinary Wizards. In retrospect, this was to prove less than ideal and some defensive magic would have been far more useful, but it seemed a gamble worth taking at the time and one which had yielded victory in the past.

So, all ready to go with a total of 16 troop units establishing my break point at a comfortable 8 (in most Warmaster games the battle stops once one side has lost half of its units).

The next thing I considered vital for an Undead army were the Liche Priests. I immediately bought the maximum I could afford in the game (four). Having lots of characters is more useful for the Undead than it is for the other armies. Undead cannot rely on Initiative to move when the enemy is close, so you need to issue more orders than any other army. Furthermore, your average troops are almost the poorest close combat units in the game, but they can be deadly when used in combination with magic. Like in Warhammer, Undead have probably the best magic in the game and the Liche Priests are your Wizards. In particular, I like the Raised Dead spell, which allows you to create new unit of Skeletons in combat with the enemy. This allows the Undead to use one particularly devastating tactic; charge the enemy in the front with decent close combat troops and create some Skeletons behind the enemy ranks. If successful, this has a devastating effect, reducing the number attacks the enemy have (because they will be surrounded) and, more importantly, cutting the enemy’s line of retreat. In this way, if forced to give ground, the enemy will be completely wiped out! To try to use this tactic at its best I bought four Liche Priests and gave to one of them the expensive but powerful Zombie Dragon (terror-causing creatures are extremely effective in Warmaster, considerably reducing the enemy’s attacks). I gave the flying Liche Priest a Dispel Scroll for protection against enemy magic.

The best troops in the Undead list are, in my opinion, the Chariots but unfortunately they are also quite expensive, so I could only afford two units of them. However I gave one the mighty Banner of Shielding, making that unit the centre of my army. I imagined it as my Tomb King’s bodyguard and consequently (and to follow the spirit of Nigel Stillman’s Khemri Warhammer list) I put my Tomb King in a Chariot.

At this point I have to explain what I call the ‘Rule of Four’. Since you can issue orders to brigades of up to four units, to minimise the number of orders you will need to issue in the game, you should build your army based on the brigades you will form on the battlefield.

The first two brigades in my army were already made by the eight units of infantry and to respect the rule of four, I bought two units of Cavalry to fight at the side of my Chariots. Brigades don’t have to be made of units of the same type, but they perform better if they are, so that their movement is not limited by slower troops. The next brigade is the Artillery made up of all the available war machines (two Skull Chukkas and two batteries of Bone Throwers). Long range shooting is very important to disrupt the enemy battle line and the Skull Chukkas are amongst the best war machines in the game!

Finally, I bought the maximum allowance of Carrion units, because flying troops have an unbelievably long reach, allowing you to strike almost anywhere on the battlefield. A very versatile and powerful troop type, especially to kill annoying artillery pieces. The ability of war machines to stand and shoot will often mean that your flyers get annihilated, but not before maiming or destroying the vulnerable artillery units. A worthwhile exchange in my opinion.
The points I had left at this point were quickly spent on a couple of large monsters: a Sphinx and a Bone Giant. I don't expect them to achieve much, but being big and scary, they normally distract the enemy from the really dangerous units like the Chariots and can take quite a lot of punishment because of their high Armour value. The Sphinx is quite good at this and, if you put it at the front of your army, the enemy will have to shoot at a model which should discard two-thirds of the hits suffered — it is much more resilient than the other Undead. Hopefully the enemy will spend some of his resources to kill these relatively unimportant models while the rest of my army advances.

My dark and tattered legions are now ready to meet the gleaming Elven warhost.
Although the book contains a number of exciting scenarios to play, before the game started Rick and Alessio agreed to use the simplest and quickest method of starting a game of Warmaster.

The armies would set up 80cm away from each other in a line and they would use screens to hide their deployment from each other. They also agreed to keep the victory conditions simple as well. The winner would be the first one to kill the enemy General or to reduce the enemy's army to half strength. This is a standard victory condition found in many of the Warmaster scenarios.

The scenery was set up using the modular terrain boards and woods built by Nigil Stillman specifically for play testing Warmaster on.

With the scenery set up, the victory conditions set and the armies deployed, it was time to remove the deployment screens and let battle commence...
Aereadhe the Mage was the first to react. He muttered an incantation and a rainbow of lights danced above him. The archers far to his left acknowledged this signal and hurried to the dense woodland that lay between them and the ruins. Well-drilled, they soon reached the trees, and took position to fire at any Undead who dared approach.\textsuperscript{1}

Next, Aereadhe bade the Reavers and bolt throwers forward into a battle line and motioned to the Silver Helms to join them. He flew ahead of them on a magical cloud, his stern gaze locked on the unending line of Skeletons.\textsuperscript{2}

Valoriel’s standard bearer motioned at the brigade on his left to march forward. The archers moved to the front of the formation and the brigade manoeuvred into two lines. Next, the chariots were ordered forward. They rumbled towards the enemy, manoeuvring into attack formation, their right flank protected by a copse of oak trees. The General looked towards the Eagles but they were but distant specks in the sky. He urged his chariot forward, maintaining proximity with his forces.\textsuperscript{3}

Meanwhile, Iymfre rode ahead of the other brigade with shouts of encouragement. Alas, the High Elf infantry failed to share his enthusiasm and advanced only warily, failing to match the speed and efficiency of their kindred on the right flank.

Naranniel urged the Silver Helms on the right flank forward. They galloped alongside the chariots, the High Elf Hero turning away to be closer to the Eagles. The Dragon Arrach hissed at the lines of Undead but its rider Falunieras had been ordered to hold his ground until the right moment.

The ranks of the Undead were still too far away for any of the Elven archers to shoot. They tensed their bow strings in readiness.

\textbf{UNDEAD: Turn 1}

To Valoriel’s surprise, the Undead army stood rooted to the spot. A chill crept up his spine as a low murmur rose from the Undead lines; the foul litanies of the Liche Priests attempting to bind the Skeleton warriors to their will. On the Undead left flank, a single brigade of Skeletons shambled forward towards the wood near their lines but had not yet reached its leafy cover.\textsuperscript{4} Suddenly, there was a terrifying roar and the ground shook as the skeletal lion statue sprang to life. Valoriel grew pale. This was a Sphinx. He had heard tales of such creatures, guardians of the Tomb Kings’ pyramids who were brought to life in times of crisis. Now one was trampling towards his line of chariots. It reached the edge of the woods and raised itself on its hind legs, roaring and clawing towards the horrified Elves.

1. The Archers are given two orders – one to move forward and one to enter the woods. A character can continue giving orders until he fails his Command roll.

2. The Wizard was amazingly successful at ordering his troops – seven successes out of seven.

3. Orders cannot be given to units out of range of a character’s command radius.

4. Alessio was incredibly unlucky with his Command rolls, failing all but two. As a result, his army had to remain virtually motionless for his entire first turn.
Unperturbed, Iymfre shouted at the troops he commanded on the left flank to close ranks. The brigades of spearmen and archers consolidated their defensive position, the archers moving in column hastening to close the gap on the left. Aeréidhe sped forwards towards the ruins, followed by the units of Reavers and Silver Helms hoping to outflank the listless Undead. Narraniel reached the Eagles, waving his sword in the direction of the enemy in the hope that they would understand his order. But the proud Eagles just soared higher into the clouds. Why should they move in to attack now? What a foolish plan. Their respect for the competence of the Elven commanders had been soured. Exasperated by the arrogance of the Eagles, Valoriel motioned Falunieras to urge his Dragon forward to support the chariots. The Dragon soared effortlessly through the air, hovering in front of the oakwoods. Bolstered by the presence of this great creature, the chariots readied themselves for the charge. Valoriel bade the Silver Helms position themselves just behind the chariots. His attack plan was ready, poised to bear down upon the rapidly approaching Sphinx. Valoriel’s chariot trundled towards the creature, leading his troops from the front.

Because the Undead had remained in place, the archers were still frustrated at being unable to shoot at anything.

The Elf Hero rolled a blunder for his Command roll (double 6). Rolling on the Blunder chart, the result was that the Giant Eagles now had a -1 penalty on any dice to command them.
UNDEAD: Turn 2

The Liche Priests’ ritual motions became more frenzied, yet the two huge brigades of walking dead still did not respond, a thousand empty sockets staring vacantly at the steady approach of the High Elves. However, on the left, the catapults positioned themselves on the crest of the hill, in range of the massed chariots and cavalry of the Elves. The Bone Giant pounded his fists on the ground but did nothing more than issue bellowing threats. The Sphinx continued snarling at the chariots and cavalry massing against it. The Tomb King seemed to have trouble controlling it. He raised a withered hand clutching the orb which now pulsed with a faint glow. The Sphinx shook its skull and leaped forward, though not far enough to reach the mass of mounted High Elves.

Slowly flapping its ragged wings, the Zombie Dragon launched itself into the air. Its rider pointed morbidly at the chariots and with blood-curdling screams the Carrion momentarily blotted out the sun before diving down upon the hapless crew and horses, the Zombie Dragon swooping down to join the slaughter.

The Liche Priests on the ground crept forward. The two closest to the Elven battle lines gesticated, croaking evil incantations. The ground in the woods behind the Dragon and chariots erupted as dozens of animated bones rose from long-forgotten graves. Bony fingers ripped riders from their chariots and pulled down horses. Arrach the Dragon swatted at the Skeletons as they crawled over him, hacking at his scales with jagged knives. Valoriel looked at the scene with disbelief.

6 We couldn't believe it. Alessio still couldn’t give his Skeletons orders.

7 Even though it is a huge model, the Zombie Dragon and other character mounts only indirectly affect combat by adding bonus attacks to the attacks of the unit they have joined. The advantage of characters is that they can only be killed if the entire unit they are with is also destroyed.

8 The Elven Dragon rider differs from the Zombie Dragon in that it is treated as a unit, not a character mount, so can be hurt by sufficient hits, etc. Normally Dragons cause terror, reducing an opposing unit’s attacks but Skeletons are immune to this. Of course, the Elves suffer the effects of terror because the Zombie Dragon is attacking with the units of Carrion.

9 One of the Undead army’s most potent magic spell is the Raised Dead spell. Alessio used it to attack the Elves from the rear and to block their retreat ensuring their destruction.

10 Always take a Dispel Magic Scroll when facing the Undead!

11 After combat, the loser must retreat. If its path is blocked by enemy, terrain or friendly units who cannot or will not make way for it then it is destroyed. Even a large unit such as a Dragon Rider, with a hefty six hits, can be destroyed if it has nowhere to retreat to after a lost combat.

12 After combat, winning units can choose to stay where they are, fall back, pursue a fleeing enemy or advance if the enemy has been destroyed. If a pursuing or advancing unit meets another enemy, a fresh combat is fought, the combat phase only ending when there is no one left to pursue or when combat ends in a draw.

13 Non-flyers cannot follow up flying units.
HIGH ELF: Turn 3

Driven to fury by the deaths of the charioteers, the Silver Helms charged the Carrion. Narranniel, weeping with fury, urged the Eagles to avenge his fallen kin. Enraged, the Eagles dive into battle. Aereãide ordered the brigade of Reavers and Silver Helms to charge round the ruins and engage the Undead’s right flank. Alas, the riders balked at the sight of the silent, endless rows of dead warriors staring menacingly at them.

Iymfre finally managed to complete the battle ranks of the infantry brigades and General Valoriel, eager for revenge, wheeled the right-hand brigade to face the approaching Sphinx. Aereãde swept through the air, blessing the Elven archers with the gift of Heaven’s Fire as they prepared to shoot. Thus enchanted, they let loose volley after volley of arrow fire upon the stone monstrosity, which was forced to retreat before the stinging hail of iron. The Reavers fired at the Skeletal ranks but they remained unperturbed.

Meanwhile, Narranniel had charged forward into the melee against the Carrion, and the Silver Helms, their courage bolstered by his sudden appearance, lunged at the Undead birds. The Carrion deftly flew higher, avoiding the full impetus of the charge but fell straight into the claws of the Eagles. The Elven knights were showered with bits of bone and rotten flesh as the entire flock of Carrion was torn apart. Victorious, the Silver Helms and Giant Eagles fell back a safe distance away from the remaining Carrion, Zombie Dragon and Sphinx.

UNDEAD: Turn 3

At last, the Liches and Tomb Lord managed to waken the Undead warriors from their slumber. The bone throwers were dragged forward to close ranks with the Skeleton brigades and the Tomb Lord manoeuvred his ranks of cavalry and chariots to form a defensive curved line facing the Elves. The brigade of Skeletons on the left flank were commanded to take the woods beside the cavalry. Valoriel cursed. It would cost many lives to break that line. Fortunately, the Bone Giant still refused to move, staring blankly forward. Back near the oakwood, the Liche Priest riding the Zombie Dragon succeeded in making the Skeletons in the woods shuffle forward to attack the Elven archers in their flank. The Sphinx, was commanded to charge the archers in the front while the Carrion swooped at the Eagles, tearing at them in mid air. Valoriel gripped his sword as the Zombie Dragon rose into the air and flapped towards him, drooling goblets of black mucus.

There was chaos on the Elves’ left flank. Iymfre had spurred his steed towards the cavalry but before he could order them away, they were cut down by missile fire and by the bone missiles of the Undead bolt throwers. Two nearby Liche Priests raised their arms and flung bolts of pure darkness at the survivors which exploded, eviscerating steeds and vapourising fully armoured warriors. Those who still lived turned tail and fled back to where they had come from. The other two Liche Priests on the Elven right flank attempted to summon more warriors from the grave, without success.

With piercing screams the Eagles dodged round the cumbersome Carrion and slashed at them with their talons, felling several of the creatures and forcing

*Units close enough to the enemy can use their Initiative to charge, without needing orders from characters.

*Mortal troops suffer a penalty if given an order when close to enemy troops. They cannot use their Initiative to charge until their next turn as the Initiative phase comes before the Orders phase. Because the Wizard failed to order them to charge, they are sitting ducks for the Skeleton archers.

*This Elven spell allows a unit to fire twice in one round. The Elves are so skilled at magic that they can re-roll one failed magic roll.

*Even if shooting fails to destroy a unit, the unit may have to fall back under the onslaught.

*The Undead archers had to retreat before the Reavers’ arrow fire but the unit behind refused to move. Normally, a unit which must retreat into another unit may suffer confusion, which severely disrupts it, but in this case, because the Undead never suffer from confusion, nothing happens. This means that Undead are particularly difficult to shift by bonfire if there is another unit supporting them from behind. the meleé of courage was forced back by the Undead. The archers are pushed directly away from the Skeletons (units always retreat from the enemy unit with the most number of stands). They are forced back. The Eagles never let the Carrion recover, falling upon them, surrounding them, allowing not a single vulture to escape. Screeching in victory, the Eagles swooped down upon the Skeletons which had attacked the Elven archers.

Meanwhile, the Sphinx was being shot at as it bounded towards the archers. It reached the unit bristling with arrows. Like a cat among mice, it clawed and snapped at the terrified Elves, crushing bones and pulping flesh. In turn, the Elves overcame their fear and hacked at the monster with their swords, chipping away at its stone skin. Some of the Skeletons which had charged into the fray continued to attack the Elves in their flank, slaughtering all who faced them, others turned to swipe at the Eagles diving down on them. Several Giant Eagles fell to earth mortally wounded and the ferocity of the Skeletons’ attack kept the birds at bay. The archers succumbed to the Undead and the survivors were pushed back towards their comrades forming a confused mass. With a triumphant growl, the Sphinx pounced at the retreating archers, followed by the Skeletons which also smashed into the Elven spearmen behind. The Elves hurriedly formed a defensive position and the Skeletons were skewered by a wall of spears. The screams of the dying were the bone chills that lined the enemy’s ranks of line facing flank were empty. Valoriel that line, standing at the breach Priest who faced them, avoided charge. The Eagles, word as the wards him, ad spurred order them back. The Elves hurriedly formed a defensive position and the Skeletons were skewered by a wall of spears.

Out of twelve dice, Rich only scored only one hit! Had they been normal troops, they could have used their Initiative to charge as they were close enough during the Initiative phase. The disadvantage of Undead is that they cannot use Initiative so must always rely on the orders of their leaders to charge. However, they ignore any modifier to the leader’s Command roll for their proximity to the enemy.

The Death Bolt is the Undead version of a spell that can be deadly against damaged units.

Giant Eagles can pursue Carrion because both are flyers.

If the combat with the Skeletons had been resolved first, the Eagles would not have been involved in the combat because they would have still been in combat with the Carrion. Alessio was too confident that the Carrion would win against the Eagles, so he chose to enact this combat first. Instead, his Carrion were destroyed and the Eagles followed up and participated in the combat that had yet to be resolved.

Missile troops can fire at a unit that charges them in the front, though cannot drive them back (hits caused count for the first round of combat).

Units are very vulnerable to attacks from behind and on the flank.

The archers are forced to face the Skeletons, and if they stood their ground, they were cut down to a man, the screams of the dying was terrible to hear. The spearmen could not stand the slaughter and they stepped back further into the morass of shields and spears, surrounded by the persistent Skeletons. More Elves fell to their cruel blades but this time there was fiercer resistance and the Skeletons were forced back by the wall of shields.

The Sphinx, too hurt to fight further, fell back beside the Zombie Dragon to recover. The surviving spearmen and the Eagles, too tired to continue fighting, decided to reform facing their enemies. The fighting had been vicious. Mounds of dead and dying Elves littered the ground, sprawling among the shattered bones of the Undead.

HIGH ELF: Turn 4

On the other side of the battlefield, Aereadhe ordered the shattered ranks of cavalry to charge once more, but they took one glance at the solid line of Undead archers and decided to hold their ground. Iymfré turned his attention to the brigade of archers in the centre of the army but his orders to advance to support the cavalry on the right were lost amidst the moans of the dying. Naranniel gave the command for the spearman brigade which had not yet seen action to form a defensive line behind their comrades, who had managed to bring order to their ranks. Valoriel’s banner bearer waved his standard, motioning the Eagles to fly back next to the Silver Helms. With a series of commands, the other units of Elf spearmen likewise formed a line to blunt further Undead attacks. Valoriel manoeuvred his chariot to where he was needed the most, in the centre of the army. Speeding through the air on his cloud, Aereadhe let loose another Elven unit not in combat, which must make way. Both units had to test to see if they became confused, the latter unit rolling a 6 which meant that they did become confused.

Combat is simultaneous in Warmaster. Before their destruction, the unit of archers tried to inflict one more hit on the Sphinx. It had already taken one hit from shooting and one from the previous round of combat, so if the archers had been lucky, it would have been reduced to half damage, which meant that its Hits and Attacks would have been halved. But the damage has to be inflicted all during one turn, so it is very difficult to accomplish this.

Though the Skeletons destroyed one stand and suffered no losses themselves, they were made to fall back because they had only caused one hit and the High Elf Spearman had caused two. The High Elf Spearman stand had suffered two hits previously this combat round, so the third destroyed it. The Skeletons, with it’s full complement of hits, was reduced to one so remained in play. At the end of a combat round, after initial combat, pursuit and advances, all hits remaining on an unit are removed, so a stand not destroyed returns to full strength by the next turn.

Taking no chances, Rich wants to weaken the Sphinx with the potent Hall of Destruction spell so uses his one-shot Ring of Magic to ensure it is automatically cast. Alessio’s timely Dispel Magic spell puts pay to that plan though.
The importance of woods in the game is that only infantry can move into woodland. Alessio failed in his third attempt to order the brigade because of this.

The Skull Chukkas were now in range. Screams pierced the air as gIBbering skulls were hurled at the Silver Helms. Many of the Elven knights fell, their armour pierced by the sharp shards of bone as the skulls smashed on impact. The knights' horses panicked and fled away from the skull catapult, their riders barely hanging on. The Liche Priest riding the Zombie Dragon launched a Death Bolt against the Eagles, driving them back. The two Liche Priests on the right Undead flank moved forward, smashing the battered cavalry brigade with Death Bolts. Warriors and horses fell screaming in agony as the dark magic blasted them. The survivors turned tail, panic-stricken.

Another Liche Priest screamed out the words of a poisonous spell and, to Valoriel's horror, Elves who had recently fallen rose up to attack the rear of the unit of warriors charged by the Sphinx. Stricken with horror, the spearmen tried to escape their Undead kinfolk. Slaughter ensued as some of the unit were trapped between the spears of the dead Elves and the vicious fangs of the Sphinx. Dripping in gore, the Sphinx followed after the retreating spearmen but they had fallen back towards their comrades, who helped them drive off the stone guardian. Cheering at the sight of the monster backing off, the Elves swept forward to surround it. They embedded their spears deep into the cracks that had appeared in the Sphinx's hide. Roaring, the Sphinx lashed out at the Elves but was in too much agony to cause sufficient casualties. Neither side succeeding to break the other, both retreated.

Now Valoriel's wisdom of deploying his spearmen behind the front line became apparent. These charged the Undead which had been risen behind the Elves in front. The Elves were grimly resolved to put to rest their comrades who had been turned into the Tomb King's puppets. In the meantime, Naranniel beseeched the Eagles to fly to their aid but they were circling too high to respond. Valoriel barked orders at the brigade in front of him to form two ranks of spears facing the main Undead army and a rank of archers to prepare for the expected assault, with a rank of archers covering the left flank. His army having now formed the semblance of a defensive position, Valoriel charged resolutely into combat with the risen Elves. Aerieadhe, having achieved no response from the frontline spearmen, glided towards the Sphinx to resolve matters himself. A blast of magical energy smashed into the Sphinx's side and it staggered away from the Elf Mage. Valoriel rampaged through the mass of Undead, gladdening the hearts of the Elves who cut the Undead to pieces, reducing them once more to corpses. The way hacked clear, Valoriel and his warriors now faced the brigade of Skeletons leering at them from the woods. Cautiously he ordered his men back, his chariot would have been useless in those dense thickets, and he grimly bade them to stand firm.

The cavalry became confused in this instance because whenever a stand needs to roll for being pushed back by shooting or magic (it rolls 1 dice per bit taken, if any dice comes up a 6, the unit becomes confused).

On its own the High Elf Spearman unit would have lost but, because it had fallen back in line with a neighbouring uncommitted unit, that unit could now help support it, increasing the High Elves' combat result and winning the combat.

The Elves managed to reduce the Sphinx to half strength because they inflicted 3 hits in one combat phase. But both sides inflicted only 2 hits apiece in this last engagement resulting in a draw. This meant that both units had to fall back.
The Silver Helms had just rallied when the Sphinx smashed into them. The Skeleton infantry lurched out of the wood, and charged alongside the Sphinx, while the Skeletal archers shambled out of their cover to protect the flank. The Liche Priest riding the Zombie Dragon willed the Bone Giant forward, though it was too slow to reach the Elves. The Bone Throwers moved closer and the Skeleton brigade on the right flank marched to the crest of the hill. The chariots and cavalry remained listless where they stood, the Tomb King powerless to influence them.

The Liche Priests crept forward once more, chanting. With a hiss, the Zombie Dragon spied the Elven general fighting in the front rank and glided forward to join battle. Valoriel prayed to his gods for succour. He kissed his blade as his chariot drew closer to the stench of the Zombie Dragon.\(^37\) The Tomb King abandoned his position at the centre of the army and his chariot rode forward closer to the battle.

Now the Undead let loose with everything they had. Screaming skulls smashed into the centre of the Elf army forcing back the units they struck. Elves ran from the missiles sobbing with fear. The bone throwers spat their spears into the archers facing them, pushing them back with the force of their attack. The Skeleton archers on the hill were now in range and slew most of the hapless Reavers with a rain of arrows, the survivors retreating for cover. A Liche Priest scattered more Elven archers with a well-aimed Death Bolt. The High Elf army was shaking beneath the tumult of Undead missile fire.

But now the Silver Helms were eager to demonstrate their prowess. Singing songs of battle, they smashed into the Sphinx with their lances. The monster fell back, looking for a chance to pounce, but the Elven knights followed up their success and the Sphinx’s scream carried across the battlefield as its skin cracked. Chunks of stone fell from its body, it dropped to its knees and keeled over, smashing into the centre of the Elf army. Exultant, the Silver Helms swept into the rear of the body, it dropped to its knees and keeled over, smashing into the centre of the Elf army. Exultant, the Silver Helms swept into the rear of the battle. A Liche Priest scattered more Elven archers with a well-aimed Death Bolt. The High Elf army was shaking beneath the tumult of Undead missile fire.

All too late... The Skeletons and Elves hacked and slashed at each other with furious anger. Valoriel ploughed through the ranks of Undead with his chariot. The Zombie Dragon crushed whole units with its claws, snapping off heads and limbs with its jaws. Nearby, the Tomb King stretched out his arms and displayed the true extent of his power. Blue fire flickered across his body as he pointed at his troops battling the Elf General. The Skeletons were filled with unearthly swiftness, leaping over the stabbing spears of the Elves to slash at their faces or rip out their hearts.\(^38\) Lord Valoriel sounded the order to fall back. His chariot rumbled over the living bodies of his own men as his terrified horses struggled to get away from the Dragon. He turned his chariot once more to face his pursuers. His men were cut down like corn before the Skeleton horde. Valoriel screamed defiance at the Zombie Dragon which towered above him. In the chaos, his standard bearer had been dragged from the chariot and the Lord Valoriel himself now gripped the tattered banner. In one final effort, he hurled it at the monster as its fetid maw closed around him...\(^39\)

36 Remember that these characters only indirectly influence the combat they are in and can only be killed if the entire unit they accompany is destroyed.

37 A unit can only advance once during a combat phase. In this instance, the Silver Helms, after pursuing the Sphinx and destroying it, advanced into the Skeleton archers but could not advance further to give much needed help to their General.

38 The Tomb King has a special power which he can use once a battle to increase the attacks of any nearby Undead unit. This is best used at times of critical importance such as this combat round.

39 When the General dies, that's it. Game Over. Needless to say, it was a victory for the Undead. Alessio: 655 victory points, Rick, 390 victory points.
After what looked like a promising start I found myself which I held in esteem already, but also the Sphinx and the which fought and won the game for me were the Carrion, which repeatedly refused to join the fray, and the game was.

With his best units wiped out on turn three, Rick had to play the rest of the game with a massive disadvantage. I managed to keep up the pressure on his right flank, where the Sphinx worked wonders against the Elf infantry (also thanks to Rick's appalling bad dice...) and we both had the feeling that the Elves never got close to regaining the advantage lost.

In the end, I did not get to use my best troops, the chariots, which repeatedly refused to join the fray; and the game was resolved in a massive infantry clash where the Elven General was stricken down by the most successful of my characters, the Liche Priest on the Zombie Dragon!

The presence of so many Wizards on my side proved decisive (always take a Dispel Scroll, especially against Undead!), confirming that the Undead need to synchronise their magic with their troops to be competitive. The units which fought and won the game for me were the Carrion, which I held in esteem already, but also the Sphinx and the humble Skeletons, which I had considered unimportant before this game.

This victory was their victory, clear proof that you always need to play lots of games before expressing strong opinions on your troops!

Oh dear...

After what looked like a promising start I found myself constantly wrong-footed. Reduced to a series of fire-fighting actions, my plan fell apart with the inevitable disastrous result. Alessio fought a very able battle, forcing me to constantly expend orders on reorganising my battle-lines rather than attacking his forces. Still, there's always a next time!

I was somewhat embarrassed to fall for the old Carrion attack and Raise Dead combination. I'd already convinced myself that the presence of the Dragon would discourage Alessio from mounting an attack so early in the game... more fool me! The ability of the Undead to raise dead and surround their opponent in the first round of combat is a battle winner when it comes off, and Alessio, to his credit, stacked the odds to make sure it did. Obviously I should have taken a Scroll of Dispelling.

After that, I struggled to bring my troops into battle and never really succeeded. The Undead steadfastly refused to move forward whilst my Archers never quite got their act together. Seeing any chance of victory ebbing away, I threw my cavalry forward hoping for a lucky dice roll, but, alas (and deservedly) it was not to be. Left inconveniently in front of the enemy's Archers, my cavalry were doomed, but by then it was more a question of salvaging honour than winning an outright victory. Deprived of any chance of turning Alessio's right flank, the battle focussed around the centre-right of my line.

This phase of the battle was one in which I had a breath-taking series of slim chances to turn the tide! The Undead are tremendously fragile once forced onto the defensive. Several times I pinned my hopes on destroying the enemy in a single round so that I could advance forward and carry the fight onto Alessio's weaker troops. In terms of the rules, an 'advance' is an extra move of 20cm or 10cm which a victorious unit can make if it destroys its enemy. An advance can initiate a whole new combat and usually ends with troops breaking through their enemy's line. In the cold light of day, I have to admit that the odds were very firmly against success, but I felt I had very little choice under the circumstances. In the end I committed my General to battle (always a do or die action in Warmaster) and that was that. Lessons to be learned... Even Dragons are vulnerable and with a 100cm move can be perfectly well concealed until ready for action. As for the Undead – well they might be reluctant to move most of the time but their magical prowess more than makes up for their inherent disadvantages. My High Elf 's are usually much more effective, relying on drive-backs and confusion to disrupt the enemy formations. With Undead, confusion doesn't apply, and by stationing a second line behind the first to prevent it being driven back, the Undead can avoid having their formations broken apart altogether.

I know from past experience that the Undead can be a vulnerable army but Alessio demonstrated just how effective it can be when played to its strengths. As for the High Elves, I felt I hadn't really done the army justice, for past experience has shown them to be one of the finest J...

Mordheim is a tabletop skirmish game where players control rival warbands, battling each other for supremacy in the dark and dangerous streets of the ruined city. Everything you need to begin fighting your battles in Mordheim is in this box. There are two complete warbands and five card ruined buildings.
